"OLD SALTS"

By E. B. TUSTIN, JR.

ANYONE WHO has eaten an unsalted meal such as a picnic lunch when someone forgot the salt, knows that most foods taste flat without it. It may have been respect for the flavoring and preserving properties of salt together with its former costliness that led people in the olden days to venerate that now plentiful and inexpensive commodity with handsome containers.

The great importance of salt and the salt dish is shown by its inclusion in the painting of DaVinci's 'The Last Supper,' which shows the overturned salt cellar in front of Judas—whence the ancient symbol of ill-omen.

Mark of Social Distinction

In Russia, instead of presenting notable visitors with the keys to the city, they were given a salt dish, usually made of silver, gold-plated.

The dining observances of the Middle Ages assigned a very important position to the salt cellar, which marked the division at table between the members of the family and their domestics. At banquets, the host and his more distinguished guests sat at head of the table "above the salt" while the less noble sat "below the salt." In the 11th Century one of the laws of King Canute provided that any person sitting at a banquet above the position to which he was entitled should be "pelted out of his place by bones at the discretion of the company."

As a consequence of the prestige of salt the vessel which contained it became a prominent object at banquets and the salt cellar employed on state occasions was massive and richly decorated.

Especially was this true in the Middle Ages when the silversmiths brought to the highest perfection the artistic and very ornate examples that may be seen in some museums and in large collections of early silver. Some of these salt cellars were 18½ inches high and consisted of three parts that could be separated to form three dishes.

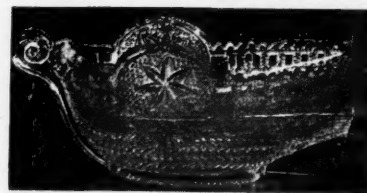

Sumptuous Salt Cellars

These large salt cellars were first known as 'The Salt.' Later they were called Standing Salts, Master Salts and Steeple Salts. The largest were made in England. The oldest extant, a handsome and elaborately designed 'hour-glass' type, with ornamented cover resembling a church spire, stands 15½ inches high and was presented to New College, Oxford, in 1492.

One of the great treasures in the Altman collection at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, is a shell-shaped salt cellar of solid gold about 8 inches in breadth, with exquisite enamel decoration. It is said to have been made about 1540 by Benvenuto Cellini, the great sculptor and goldsmith, and formerly belonged to Prince Rospigliosi of Rome. The cup rests upon a fanciful dragon which in turn is supported by a tortoise.

Pictured are two master salts belonging to the early reign of Queen Elizabeth. The tall cylindrical one crowned with a vase was the state salt cellar of the House of Mostyn and resembles a small Dutch stove. Drum shaped salts came into fashion about 1550. One discovered in an ancient chest in Flintshire, England, is 18½ inches high and of solid silver, enriched with floral and fruit designs, the style of ornament then prevailing in England.

Another large silver salt is surmounted by a figure carrying a sword and shield, and decorated with reproductions of fruits and foliage.

It is said that during one period in France salts were provided with a lock to protect the contents. The great value of these elegant silver salts can be realized from the sale of one of them in 1928 for $10,000.

The ornate standing salts were superseded in the 17th Century by smaller salts, plain or engraved with floral decorations. The bell shape salt shaker type was popular, fitted with a ring to hold a napkin.

The Salt Silversmith At Work

Master salts were made in the following manner—the various parts, body, lid, stem and base were beaten out of flat sheet silver until the desired shape was obtained. Then before joining together the decorative enrichment was tooled on, consisting principally of fruit, leaves, flowers, lions and scrolling.

It was the use of precious metals that stimulated the lavishing of a wealth of ornament, resulting in a sumptuous effect.

Bringing On the Salt

A European visitor to the palace of Queen Elizabeth in the 16th Century has left a record of the ceremony attendant to placing the Great Salt on the banquet table. "First the Salt was brought forward by the Chief Steward in resplendent dress, attended by two lackeys, following whom appeared a procession of servants bearing divers foods."

At table before each plate were plain dishes called trencher salts, into which was placed a portion of salt removed from the Great Salt. The early trencher salts were small platters but in the Middle Ages silver trencher salts were made, in round or oblong form.

So far as is known none of the large elegant standing silver salts were produced in America, although the silversmiths here did fashion many smaller trencher salt dishes, copying the styles of Europe. They also made them of pewter.

Pewter Salts

When America was first settled, pewter was for the wealthy and it came from England. Our ancestors lived in a world where a silver spoon or a pewter bowl were 'possessions' worthy of being specifically mentioned in a last will and testament. Woodenware was the vogue of everyday life. Yet there were few households of the well-to-do that did not include among their treasures a pewter salt dish and perhaps even a silver spoon. It is said that the first piece of pewter plate installed in a new house or aspired to by the newly successful in early American days was a salt cellar. One would generally last a lifetime.

In 1693, John Caxy of London, shipped to Joseph Mallenon, his agent in Boston, a consignment of merchandise including 7 dozen pewter salt dishes at 12 pence to 2 shillings 2 pence each, in three sizes. These were high prices in those days and reflect something of the ceremonial glory that still clung to the salt cellar.

American Glass Salts

The manufacture of blown glass commenced in America in 1765 and salt cellars were among the first utilitarian articles to be given beauty of form and color. They were only produced commercially but blown to individual order. Stiegel, the first glass manufacturer in America to produce salts commercially, considered them of sufficient importance to be listed specifically in his advertisements which appeared in the Pennsylvania Gazette in 1772. Pressed glass was afterwards made first in America and then in England, by American methods.

As the popularity of glass tableware spread and through reduced prices became available to more people, salts were produced in increasing numbers and in a multitude of designs. One present-day collector has published a catalog of 2,537 varieties and acknowledges hundreds of additional shapes still unlisted.

At first, heavy in form, later cut glass designs and Greek vase patterns were employed and afterwards elaborate lacy patterns came into vogue.

The earliest American salt cellars are often square in shape, although a typical design was a shell or basket form. Colors employed were blue, green and ivory. At weddings in Colonial America an Ivory Salt was highly esteemed by the bride as a present.

About 1830 there was a change to cut glass motives, often of heavy individual size. Master salts, however, for general table use were often pressed in the shape of a goblet. Blue was the only color used with this form although the majority of specimens are clear glass.

In the lacy group occur the rare covered salts, resembling our grandmothers' sugar bowls. Salts of this period, 1830-1840, were also pressed in a greater wealth of color and given more variety of shape and decorative design than any other article of tableware. The glass founder turned to objects around him for inspiration and made salt cellars in the shape of animals, birds, household articles and other forms seen in everyday life.

There were salts in the form of sherbet cups, swans, tulips, chickens, turtles, swallows, hay wagons, dogs and carts, baby carriages, Russian sleighs, blacksmiths' anvils, and kitchen stoves. Some were modeled to resemble candle stick holders; a three-cornered Pilgrim's hat, a pair of shoes, or a four-wheeled wagon.

Some salts were pressed in designs commemorating personages and events or bearing the American Eagle, which gives them added interest. One salt cellar is in the form of a

The First Automobile Race in America

Distraught entrants, unable to get their machines ready for the Chicago race, importuned the committee in charge to postpone the event. The result was that it was agreed to hold the official race on Thanksgiving Day but to run a "consolation" contest on the original date, for a prize of $500.

In the so-called "consolation" contest, cars were lined up not far from the present southwestern entrance of the Museum of Science and Industry, which had been the Fine Arts building of the Columbian Exposition of 1893. The start was made at 7:30 o'clock in the morning. It was a bright fall day, warm and with a blue haze in the sky; real Indian summer weather. The two cars chugged west on the Midway, through the park system, and on to Milwaukee Avenue. All went well until the Duryea car got to a point near Half Day, Ill. Here the machine overtook a farm wagon loaded with hay. Charles E. Duryea, the driver, called for the farmer to pull to one side to let him pass. The farmer, possibly startled by the strange device coming up from behind, pulled off the road to the left. A story of the accident, printed the next day, said:

"The brakes of the Duryea machine seem to have been inadequate and the driver chose to go into the ditch rather than hit the wagon. In the mishap the wheel was smashed and the car was out of the race. Mueller, in his Benz machine, made the 92 miles from the start to Waukegan and back to the Grant Monument in Lincoln Park in the elapsed time of 9 hours and 22½ minutes; running time, 8 hours and 44 minutes." It was explained that the amazing speed was approximately ten miles an hour.

It was emphasized at all times that the contest was more than a race. Mr. Kohlsaat early conceded that it might be possible for someone to come up with a "racing machine" that could get through with fast time. He wasn't interested in mere racing. He stipulated that every entry must be a "practical" machine, one capable of carrying two or more persons "in safety and comfort."

It was stressed that the motive behind the race was to encourage the development of machines that would do a real job in highway transport on a sound basis. To check performance, an "umpire" was to ride in each car to keep a record of performance. The award was to be made on "features in this order": (a) general utility; (b) speed; (c) cost, i. e., the original cost of the machine; (d) economy, or the cost of the fuel used; and (e) general appearance and excellency of design.

The umpire kept a close check on, among other things, "Time delays" enroute. Here is the time out for the Benz car as reported in minutes:

"By sparking machine failure, 2; by loss of tire, 7; by adjusting tire the second time, 3:30; by sparking machine trouble, 2:30; by taking water, 4; by sparking machine, 3:30; lost road by fault of bicycle guides, 4; taking supplies at Waukegan, 7; taking supplies at Winnetka, 5; loss at grade crossings, 7:30; total loss of time, 46 minutes."

With the official race postponed until Thanksgiving Day, November 28, the interest in the contest waxed higher. It was hoped that "twenty or thirty" cars might be on hand. But three days before the race a heavy sleet storm set in, followed by snow. Thanksgiving dawned with "several inches of snow" on the ground.

The racers were appalled but the committee was insistent that there be no more postponements. On the eve of the day for the race it seemed likely that there would be eleven starters. But the snow, ice, and other hazards started eliminations before the starting hour arrived.

Haynes and Apperson, of Kokomo, Ind., had a car on Chicago's side all set to go. A newspaper report of the day said:

"They started for Jackson Park fully intending to be in the race but in making a sharp turn at Indiana Avenue and 38th Street, to avoid a street car, the forward wheel of the motorcycle was smashed and they gave up the idea of racing."

A. Baushke and brother of Benton Harbor, Mich., due to the bad roads, failed to arrive in time for the race. "Something snapped" in the steering gear of the "wagon" belonging to Max Hertel, of Chicago, and that car was out of it. A. C. Ames, of South Chicago, and George W. Lewis, of Chicago, also withdrew.

The line-up at the starting time, again only a short distance from the present Museum of Science and Industry, saw what the papers described as "an immense crowd, that had to be controlled by the police thronging all approaches." One story said that "the contestants had a difficult time getting through the mob."

Ready for the start, finally, were the following:

1. Duryea entry.
2. Mueller entry.
3. "Rogers machine" entered by the R. H. Macy Company of New York.
4. "Motor Drag," entered by the De la Vergne Refrigerating Machine Company of New York.
5. "Electrobat," entered by Morris and Salom, of Philadelphia.
6. Sturgis Electric motorcycle, of Chicago.

The Macy car was described at the time as powered with a single cylinder gasoline motor, the power being conveyed to the "rear drivers" by a sprocket chain from a belt driven engine shaft. It had "four wheels with solid rubber tires and roller bearings."

The De la Vergne car was pictured as having three seats on an iron frame. It was powered with two 4-horsepower engines weighing about 375 pounds each. The cooling system carried 250 pounds of water. Power was transferred to the rear wheels through the medium of belts, chains, and sprocket wheels. Speed of from 3 to 25 miles an hour was claimed. The manufacturer, a bit proudly, announced, "The motor can be stopped, if necessary, by simply turning a lever, and the wagon can be reversed without stopping the engine."

The Electrobat, entered by Morris and Salom, "received its power from two 1½-horsepower electric motors weighing about 800 pounds. The batteries consisted of 4 sets of 12 cells each, having a normal capacity of 50 ampere-hours per cell." The Electrobat had one odd innovation—it was steered by turning the rear wheels. The machine used four wheels with pneumatic tires and ball bearings.

Various rules were laid down for the contest, one of the most interesting from the present-day viewpoint being the following:

"In order more thoroughly to examine into the merits of the vehicles and debar from the final contest those which are found impractical, preliminary tests will be held under the supervision of the judges prior to the race . . . In this work the judges will be assisted by the ablest mechanical experts in the country, and will be able to obtain exact and scientific data concerning each motorcycle entered in the competition."

As the time approached, however, the owners and inventors entering the cars grew wary. They rebelled at revealing their "secrets" to mechanical experts. Several of the cars were never given preliminary tests as required. In the end the judges waived these tests on some of the cars.

When the cars finally lined up for the start on that Thanksgiving morning in 1895, the active officials were Professor Barrett, C. F. Kimball, and L. L. Summers. The Morris and Salom car was the first to arrive at the scene, to the applause of the crowd. The Macy, Duryea, Sturges and De la Vergne machines soon followed. Word came that the Benz car was having trouble and was delayed. A newspaper story published the next day said:

"Ready, get up your power," shouted Judge Kimball, as he stood, watch in hand, at the side of the Duryea wagon. J. F. Duryea leaped into the wagon, followed by Arthur W. White, the umpire. At 8:55 the word 'Go' was uttered and the motorcycle passed quickly into the crowd which opened and closed as it rushed on."

The De la Vergne machine started at 8:56; the Macy at 8:59; the Sturges at 9:01; the Morris and Salom at 9:02; and the delayed Mueller entry at 10:06. The De la Vergne ma-

164 CHARLES ST.

Sept. 12, 1867.

MY DEAR [PARSONS],—I have received the beautiful volume and though, I have not yet had time to read it through, I have read enough to appreciate the skill and the poetical beauty with which you have finished your translation. It is a great honor to our city and country and a proof of the rapid growth of our culture that two such versions as your own and Longfellow's should be given to the public in the course of the same year. I cannot help thinking that each will render the other more interesting. The difficulties of the text are so great that two or three independent renderings of it will be most acceptable to all the more interested and less profoundly instructed class of readers. But I do not wonder at these words, "Tantus labor." To keep so close to the text and yet to turn it into harmonious and idiomatic English verse was a task which might well keep you busy for years. I feel sure that you will get honor and I hope profit for your faithful and admirable performance.

I am reminded that I had your name on one of my proof-sheets a day or two ago in connection with a less important but a pleasant literary effort. Somewhere, many years ago—perhaps in Putnam's Magazine,—you gave a wonderful description of the smell of election day or Independence day on the common. I was referring to that—your name was actually before me on my table when the volume came.

I thank you heartily for your beautiful gift. I thank you for this new and noble addition to our literature. I thank you for (all) that you have done in literature, including poems which for tenderness, grace, music, and finished art may rank with the best of our or any other period. Believe me, my dear [PARSONS],

Faithfully yours,

O. W. HOLMES.

29 MONTAGUE SQUARE.

DEAR SIR,—The remarks you quote were made by me. You say that it would be dangerous to interfere with "the family arrangement." I think it is impossible to do so to any great extent. You cannot by Act of Congress or Parliament make the woman's arm as strong as the man's or deprive her of position as the bearer of children. We may trouble ourselves much by debating a question which superior power has settled for us, but we cannot alter the law. To avoid, or lessen that trouble, it is I think expedient to explain and make manifest to all, the facts as they have been settled for us by that superior power,—not as doubting what may be the result. The necessity of the supremacy of man is as certain to me as the eternity of the soul. There are other matters on which one fights as on subjects which are in doubt,—universal suffrage, ballot, public education, and the like—but not, as I think, on these two.

Yours faithfully,
ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

AMWELL ST. Apl. 23 1849.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am very much afraid that it will not be in my power to let you have the $5 to-day—or even this week—for I am most dreadfully disappointed in various quarters. Of course you are aware that Frank owes me about $6—but this I would not mind losing altho' I can ill afford to do, but the speculation seemed so promising and it appears even now that Frank is able to get a living out of it and that the concern may ultimately turn out profitably, after all—but as I said, the project seemed so likely to succeed that I should not have been satisfied with myself had I not seen some risk—for the sake of the family—but I was prepared to run still further risks—in disposition—but unfortunately all my resources seem to fail at this moment—and instead of being able to assist others, I am in great need of assistance myself—I can now only assure you that the moment I can get the needful you may depend upon seeing Yours truly,

DR SIR—I have been in hopes to find a day to see you; or at least to have met you at Lady Codrington's; but I now hear she does not come to Town at all; and yr good Brother mentions no time for his coming this way; but only in general, if he grows better. I am in yr debt for some wine, but what I now write to you upon, is that I could very much wish you'd take 300 more of mine to make yr 700 an even thousand, if it be not too inconvenient to yrself. I am adjusting several of my little affairs, & am paid in a good deal of money which I do not know what to do with. I must also speedily determine upon a purchase, with yr brother, wch according as I can, or cannot, employ ye money, I wd settle as soon as possible, both his health & mine being very precarious. For within these 4 months I am fallen into an asthma almost as bad as his, and hardly able to stir abroad. I lye at present at the Earl of Orrery's in Westminster, Duke Street, whither a line will find me these 3 or 4 days, and be a particular favour to Dr Sir,

Yr faithful & obliged
humble servant,
A. POPE.

DEAR SIR,—Elliot would probably tell you exactly how the poll stands. Of the two blackguards who have left us, there is at least an equal chance that we recover one. In that case the election for the Burgh of Selkirk and most probably for the seat turn on this one vote of Sampson. I have written to Lord Montagu and in the meantime will see Sampson tomorrow early and do all in my power to gain him. I would not fear the Pringles much but George Elliot of Minto is indefatigable with a view as I believe to stir in Roxburghshire at some convenient opportunity and secure Mr. Hanway's interest. It is cruel to see the Buccleuch interest fall away at this moment owing to our friend's absence, and lamented state of health. Believe me Yours very sincerely

LEO RIEMENS SAFE

Dutch Collector Has Survived the War His Records Safe

AFTER VE DAY, the American and British correspondents of Leo Riemens began trying to re-establish contact with their Dutch colleague whose typewriter, once so busy, had been kept silent by the long years of war. When I myself suddenly woke up to the fact that now, at long last, it might be possible to communicate with Holland, I found that letters were not yet allowed. But post cards were, and early in June I mailed Leo a card on which I anxiously inquired if he were alive, if his collection had survived. This proved to be his first piece of mail from America (though our mutual friend, George K. Bishop of Poland, Ohio, had stolen a march on me by cabling) and it elicited a reply of four closely-typed pages, full of European music and record news, questions about similar activities in the U S A, but with very little on the subject of the personal hardships he had experienced. Later I learned indirectly that his sufferings were like those of most of his fellow countrymen, which have been described in newspapers and magazines and which included the eating of tulip bulbs to maintain human life. But the way Leo tells the story, you would think that, far more than proper food, clothing, warmth, safety and security, he missed the records, letters, books, magazines (Musical America, Hobbies, etc.) and all the other so-called luxuries from abroad which were to him more necessary than the grim essentials of daily living in war-stricken Holland. Doubtless he was too delighted to find himself once more writing about his favorite subject—singers and their records—to dwell at length on the miseries of the past few years. At any rate, the most striking feature of the letters he has recently sent to American collectors is the fact that his enthusiasm, instead of having disappeared under stress, actually seems more intense than ever. Soon we hope to print extracts from these letters, for naturally they are of the greatest interest to American collectors. Meanwhile—To Whom it May Concern—his address is 2 de Schuystraat 195; Den Haag, Holland.

BAUER CATALOG REVISION

Dear Fellow Record Collector:

"First of all, please forgive me for using this all too impersonal form of communication. I have received so many requests for information about the forthcoming publication that I would have no time for work on the book if I tried to answer all your questions individually.

"Work has been under way on this revision for many months. It was originally planned to have it ready for the press by June, but I have been snowed under by the wealth of material I have received from the many cooperative collectors who were kind enough to answer my call for help, and since each week new lists arrive which must be carefully checked, no definite publication date can be set at present. Every effort is being made to make this catalog as complete as possible. Now that we can communicate with a European collector like Leo Riemens (Holland), our chances of achieving a really thorough revision of Bauer's original work are better than ever. No collector could be more anxious than myself to see the early publication of this revision, but nevertheless I feel sure you will all agree that my wisest course is to hold back until every available source of information has been tapped for all it is worth.

"SCOPE OF THE BOOK: While I realize the need for a comprehensive catalog listing all types of celebrity records from the earliest days to the beginning of the electrical period (1925), such a tremendous undertaking can only be achieved with progressive steps. In 1937, Robert Bauer pioneered with the first attempt at a truly comprehensive catalog. Unfortunately this work was issued only in a very limited edition and as a result it has long been out of print. Moreover, it contained errors and omissions—hundreds of omissions—many of which were records whose existence was unknown when Bauer's book was published. For the present revision, therefore, I am concentrating my efforts on Bauer's original work. The revised edition will attempt to list ALL THE RECORDS OF THE LATERAL-CUT DISC TYPE MADE BY IMPORTANT VOCAL ARTISTS BEFORE Jan. 1, 1910. As it is not a commercial enterprise, the revision will be sold at only enough above the actual cost to reimburse me for the expense incurred.

"HOW CAN YOU HELP?" This book will be for the use and benefit of all collectors. It is a cooperative enterprise and only if all collectors take time out to help can it be a real success. I would like to urge all of you who own or have access to a copy of Bauer's original Historical Records to list for me all records which fall within the scope of the present revision and which are not in Historical Records. When listing, be sure to include (1) catalog number; (2) title, artist and composer; (3) serial number; (4) type of label. Those of you who are not familiar with Bauer's book can help by sending lists of all vocal (classical, not popular) Zonophones, early Black and Silver Columbias, Berliner, Pre-Dog Victors and any other unusual record which might fall within the scope of the book. This applies to foreign as well as domestic issues.

Sincerely yours,

William R. Moran.

COLLECTORS' VOTE ON "THE SUPREME FIFTEEN"

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

The second letter was from Angus Joss, of Joliet, Ill., and it was so well reasoned and interesting I wish I had space to quote it in full. Angus came closer to agreeing with my placement of artists than did any one else. He, too, gave a tie to first place, letting Billy Murray and Henry Burr share the honor. "It would be very hard," Joss said, "for me to decide between these two. I feel I know Billy best of the two and in his field I could not concede his place to anyone. Harry holds a place in my heart that I never can give to any other ballad singer. I have heard of more Burr than Murray fans and, if possible, they are more rabid."

Angus also gave Jones and Spencer a tie for second place. "I believe," he wrote, "Ada was the best woman singer whom I have ever heard. Operatic warblers sink into oblivion beside her matchless voice. . . . Spencer I regard as a genius of monolog and and dialog."

Like me, Joss tied Collins and Harlan in third, remarking: "I prefer Collins to Harlan in performance, but if these two were separated into a Supreme 15 I would rate Harlan right beside Collins. . . . I care little for Harlan's solo work but his duologs and monologs place him in a class with Spencer."

Joss disagreed in my choice of Macdonough for fourth place. "I like Macdonough very much," he said, "but would interchange him with either your fifth or sixth choice." This remark gave Campbell and Stanley a tie for fourth, according to Joss. Of Campbell he said: "Al's solo work doesn't appeal so much to me, but his duet, trio and quartet work rank as high as Billy Murray's multiple hook-ups." Of Stanley: "Stanley is reduced in rank with me only because I have so few titles by him as compared with his predecessors in the list. . . . As a soloist alone he is very close to Billy, even in his comic ditties."

Choosing Porter for seventh place, Angus wrote: "I never could consider Porter a great singer, except in duet or quartet work. As a comedian he surely belongs in the seventh choice and I agree with you fully in this decision."

Joss also agreed with my placement of Billy Golden, saying: "Golden as a singer and comedian in Negro dialect has no peer. I believe he is even a shade ahead of Billy Murray in this field, but Golden is not a versatile artist like Billy, so I could not place him higher than eighth."

I had listed S. H. Dudley ninth, and Joss concurred. "Dudley's quartet work, aside from his solo work," he said, "places him at least in ninth place. His resonant voice adds luster to any multiple work. His quality of voice in comic solos does not approach Billy Murray's, but it is fine nevertheless."

Tenth place was given by Joss to Hooley, the unfortunate bass who was the only one of my choices to be pushed out of the ranks of the elect. "Hooley's scarce solos," he said, "make him a baritone favorite with me. His quartet work is very fine, even on a par with Porter's. What a firm foundation he was to any quartet! He is very close to Stanley in this respect, also."

Dan Quinn holds down eleventh place on Angus' list. "I haven't," he wrote, "enough of Quinn's solos to have become intensely fond of him. He was a fine comedian, but I agree with you that he can't rate a notch higher as things stand."

Angus also placed Stewart at the bottom of his list, saying: "I am fond of his monologs, but don't play them very often, as I want to regard him as a genius, and too constant playing might cause a slight boredom. I have nearly all his records."

The Curious History of Music Boxes

The story of automatic musical instruments, from their earliest conception down through the years to the invention of the phonograph, is authentically traced in this unusual book, that contains the description and interesting historical background of music boxes of all types, and illustrates many of the rarest examples. Some of these took strange shapes, such as the butterfly music box, or the musical pistol, and many others, and are pictured for the first time in this limited edition, which also includes a section on

How many times have we heard: "I wish I had some money, this patent would earn me a fortune," or "why can't my crop pay better?" or "I wish I knew how to sell this gadget myself," or "why should my boss alone do this when I know too how the money is made?" Listen, you do not need money to start this Rice way. His method automatically pays all bills same day rendered, no bank loans, pay as you go, no borrowing from relatives or friends, no salesmen. Also no worry, quickly a home of your own all paid for. Rice paid off $5000 in mortgages a year after using this idea.

The House of Currier

By JOHN RAMSAY

While several Americans experimented with the then new process of lithography in the decade of the 1820's, William S. and John B. Pendleton were the first to make it a commercial success. New Yorkers, they became engravers, moved around the country, and finally landed in Boston. There, William worked for the engraver Abel Bowman, while John went to Europe as representative for John Doggett, a Boston book and art dealer. William bought a lithographic stone as a curiosity, became interested in its possibilities, and commissioned his brother to bring back a ton of the stones, ink, paper and other necessities, as well as a skilled pressman, a man named DuBois.

The brothers started business together in 1825, William also continuing his partnership with Bowman until 1828. By then, the lithographing firm was prospering, and they engaged an apprentice, the seventeen-year-old Nathaniel Currier, a native of near-by Roxbury. John Pendleton grew restless and moved to New York in 1829, then, briefly, to Philadelphia in 1831, returning to New York the same year William continued to do well, having three apprentices, four lithographing presses and four for copper-plate engraving in 1831.

Nathaniel Currier's apprenticeship over in 1833, he wanted to see the country, so went to Philadelphia, where he found a place with M. E. D. Brown, who had just started in business. That was not satisfactory, so he moved to New York, intending to join his old master, John Pendleton. But, instead of working for him, Currier, with a partner named Stodart, bought the establishment. Although we usually think of lithographs as framing prints, our pioneers took any job they could make money on, and the new firm seem to have made music covers and some architectural elevations and plans rather than pictures. The partnership lasted less than a year, Stodart leaving the firm in 1835. Currier carried on alone, moving to a new location. He moved several times, and his changes of address may be inserted here, Currier & Stodart, 1834, 137 Broadway; N. Currier, 1835, 1 Wall Street; N. Currier, 1836-1837, 148 Nassau Street and 2 Spruce St.; N. Currier, 1838-1856, 152 Nassau Street and 2 Spruce Street. After 1836, and until 1894, Number 2 Spruce Street was the plant or factory, the other address being the store from which prints were sold, at wholesale and retail.

If Currier spent some months looking for a profitable product, it was not long before he found one, the "current interest" subjects which were to be a specialty of his house until the end of the century. In fact, long after it had become busy and successful, with an extensive "line" of his "Cheap Engravings for the People" an important event or personality had to be added to it as "rush stock," so that the entire force dropped everything else to work on the new print, the presses running twenty-four hours a day. The earliest known Currier print is a portrait, and a fine one, of Dr. William P. Dewees, professor at the University of Pennsylvania, dated 1834. In the next year, a destructive fire in New York aroused general interest, and Currier rushed his three views of the "Great Conflagration of Dec. 16th-17th, 1835" on sale before this subsided, and also issued a view of the "Ruins of the Planters' Hotel, New Orleans," another fire subject.

The next five years were spent in building up what was to be a long-lived and successful business. Although Currier's name frequently appears as a lithographer, and he was, of course, trained as one, he was, actually, more the directing head of the firm. However, he was always ready to employ the best possible talent. John H. Bufford, later head of an important lithographic house in Boston, was one of Currier's first employees, his name appearing on the "Great Conflagration" views of 1835. Napoleon Sarony, possibly the finest of our commercial lithographers, also worked for Currier before he started his own successful business, as did Louis Maurer. Charles Currier, a brother, was loosely connected with the house for several years, having his desk in the office, but issuing prints under his own name. He also developed and marketed a superior lithographic pencil, which, of course, was used in Nathaniel's plant. And Charles' brother-in-law, James M. Ives, a self-taught artist, became Nathaniel's book-keeper in 1852, and his partner four years later.

Currier himself is described as a good-natured, rather chunky man, liked by a wide circle of friends which included such notables as Horace Greeley, Henry Ward Beecher and P. T. Barnum, all frequent visitors at the office. Like other prosperous citizens of Mid-19th Century, America, he owned trotting horses, which he enjoyed driving himself. One of his artists painted "the boss" and his wife in two of the finest American horse prints, "The Road, Winter" and "The Road, Summer," but, while others of that type give full details of horses and owner, both Currier and his steeds appeared anonymously.

By 1840, prints began to flow from the Currier press. Another "Awful Conflagration," the burning of the steamboat Lexington in Long Island Sound on January 13th, was rushed into print, his lithograph, with full details included in the title, being on sale three days later, and his first really successful "best seller." The hard-fought presidential campaign of the same year produced five portraits of William Henry Harrison, starting a long series of political pictures and campaign banners. The "Progress of Intemperance" series of 1841 are early examples of the moral and religious subjects which were enormously popular. Some even bear the imprint "N. Currier's Tract House, New York" although there is no record of such an institution. His political cartoons, on the other hand, were issued under the alias of "Peter Smith" in case their rather savage humor should attract reprisals. The historical prints, also popular, start with the "Death of Tecumseh" and "Destruction of the Tea, Boston Harbor" of 1841, both fine prints, and the local views, several hundred of which are known, also appeared early in the 1840's, the "New York City Hotel" of 1840 one of the first.

By the end of the decade, Currier's business was flourishing, and he was able to add the finer and necessarily more expensive medium and large folios to his "line," and also to develop the horse and sporting prints, Western and country scenes which are his finest achievements. The medium folio "Indian Hunter" of 1845 seems the first of these, followed by the small folio "The Sleigh Race" of 1848, one of the "Best Fifty." Then came the medium folio "Mac and Zachary Taylor" of 1849 and "Lady Suffolk" of 1850. After that in rapid succession he issued Fanny Palmer's splendid large folio shooting subjects of 1852, and the large Clipper ships, starting with "Hurricane" and "Sovereign of the Seas" the same year. The "American Express Train" of 1853 is a small folio, and was followed by Charles Parson's large one in 1855. Palmer's "American Farm Scenes" were issued in 1853, and the splendid "American Winter Scenes" in 1855, Maurer's "Life of a Fireman" series in 1854 and Tait's "The Last War-Whoop" in 1856. These set the standard of quality which was kept for many years.

CIRCUS RAILROAD WRECKS

By A. MORTON SMITH

DERAILMENT of seven cars of Cole Brothers Circus train near Little Falls, Minnesota, July 7, with an estimated loss of $53,000 worth of equipment, was the first serious railroad wreck involving a big top organization in 15 years in this country.

However, the circusiana devotees who collect photographs and preserve statistics on circus disasters, produce records that reveal traveling shows have been plagued with wrecks since the 70's when the P. T. Barnum show made railroad transportation popular with circuses, by venturing forth on its own cars.

There had been circuses transported by rail since 1854 when Den Stone loaded his little caravan on railroad-owned cars, but it remained for the P. T. Barnum Great Traveling Exposition and Dan Castello's Circus combined to travel on a 61-car show-owned train in 1872. And it was a Barnum advance car that became involved in the first important circus wreck. The accident occurred at Altoona, Iowa, August 29, 1877, when six men were killed and six were injured.

No major railroad circus has escaped railroad mishaps and curiously, wrecks have often occurred in cycles. In 1887, the John Robinson Circus was involved in two serious wrecks on successive days, November 4 and 5 at St. Louis, Mo., and Brazil, Indiana, with a loss of two lives, injuries to six and 10 cars wrecked, resulting in a loss of $200,000.

And in 1892, Cook & Whitby Circus suffered a similar tragedy, their train being wrecked July 7 at Richland Center, Wisconsin, and the following day at McGregor, Iowa, several cars being demolished, two men killed and 25 horses lost.

The most extended period of ill fortune, however, followed the S. H. Barrett Circus in 1884. This show suffered losses in five wrecks, four of them in a 25-day period in April and May. Campbell Brothers Circus was involved in three wrecks in a single season in Oregon, Wisconsin and Texas.

The name of the late Ben E. Wallace, famous circus owner of the last generation, was attached to the two circuses which suffered the heaviest loss of life in the history of railroad tragedies in the circus world.

The Great Wallace show, owned and operated by Wallace, was wrecked at Durand, Michigan, August 6, 1903, when 25 persons were killed and 121 injured. This accident occurred only three weeks after the show had been involved in a wreck at Shelbyville, Illinois, July 16, when two persons were killed and four injured.

This wreck was the most tragic so far as the loss of human lives was concerned until 1918, when the Carl Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus train, on a siding at Ivanhoe, Indiana, June 22, was struck by an empty equipment train which plowed through four coaches of the show train. This most serious wreck of circus history claimed 85 lives and injured 179 persons.

Nevertheless, 48 hours after the tragedy, the circus exhibited again in a city 100 miles from the scene. This accomplishment was made possible by the indomitable courage of showfolk, adhering to the motto of their profession, "the show must go on."

Few of the railroad wrecks have stayed the travels of circuses more than a few days and in many instances not a single performance has been lost.

The longest delays have been occasioned by the necessity for replacement of such equipment as railroad cars, tents, rigging and wagons, which are demolished.

Despite the intense rivalry that exists between circuses, when tragedy strikes, it is usually the competitor that comes forward first with the offer of equipment that the show may go on.

This was exemplified in the most recent wreck. For when Cole Brothers Circus tour appeared to be halted for some time to come by lack of railroad cars and wagons, Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus, its chief competitor, offered the use of idle cars standing on sidings in the Sarasota, Fla., winter quarters.

One of the most ingenious steps taken by a circus owner when a wreck befell his organization was that of George W. Christy, owner of Christy Brothers Circus, who set up his show in a cornfield and gave a performance while the wreckage of his show train was being cleared from the nearby railroad track.

Butterflies in Museum Exhibit

A colorful exhibit of tropical butterflies, collected by Dr. Robert J. Joplin, well known Boston surgeon, and now a Commander in the Naval Reserves, was featured recently at the New England Museum of Natural History, Boston, Massachusetts. The collection consists of more than one hundred butterflies of various species. Vladamir Nabokov, of the Harvard Agassiz Museum, assisted in the work of identifying the different types.

Commander Joplin caught and assembled the specimens in the New Guinea region of the Southwest Pacific, and shipped them home to his wife, Mrs. Mary Joplin. The idea of starting such a collection, came to him when he noticed how many strikingly beautiful varieties of butterflies there were in the Milne Bay area where he was stationed. It was a hobby completely new to him, but by dint of a little research, and much patience, the long painstaking task of catching and mounting the butterflies was accomplished during the odd moments of spare time that were available to him.

In the collection one sees the beautiful fawn-colored moth with feathered antennae, called Saturnia; the enormous Ornithoptera Hecuba, known as the "Bird Wing butterfly" because of its 8-inch wing spread; the brilliantly metallic iridescent blue of the lovely Blue Express butterfly, and many others, in weird markings of orange, black and red. But it is the gorgeous male Ornithoptera Hecuba, with its vivid markings of black and green, which is the most outstanding and exotic of them all.

In their natural habitat, these colorful insects have to contend with conditions that our own native butterflies never encounter. The dense tropical underbrush would mar their delicate wing structure, so the jungle butterfly learns to fly high among the tall tree-tops. They are preyed upon by birds, which is another reason why they must fly higher and faster than ours do. The Papilio Polydaemon butterfly, whose construction resembles a dangerous-looking red-hot poker, has the best means of protection against the birds, since its body is poisonous. The flowers of the jungle, from which the butterflies obtain honey, are all brilliantly hued; and so, as another protective measure, Nature has given the butterflies equally brilliant coloring, thus providing them with the oldest and most reliable form of camouflage.

It is when a species of butterflies is banded together in a large group, that they are most impressive. As many as 200 of the beautiful green and black variety has been observed gathering nectar from an Hibiscus bush loaded with dazzling red flowers. When our fliers first flew over New Guinea, they saw a strange blue cloud. Upon investigation, they found it was a huge flying mass of the Blue Empress butterflies.

Commander Joplin wrote that he caught the Blue Empress specimens by attaching a dead blue Empress to a tree or bush in brightest sunlight over a stream of water. Then, with a quick movement of the net, he would bag the live Empress that had been attracted by the flash of blue in the sunlight.

The grimness of war and the beauty of butterflies are a strange combination, yet out of the death and ugliness of Japanese warfare, Commander Joplin managed to glean these bits of glowing loveliness—the butterflies of the Southwest Pacific.

DOLL-OLOGY

BOY DOLLS

By MRS. REED MADDEN

SO MANY collectors have said that boy dolls are hard to find. Of my collection of 350 dolls I have about 60 boy dolls. These I have collected from corners of the world. The first one on left of first row (next page) is Swedish. I obtained it in Gothenburg. The organ grinder, one of Ravca's dolls, was bought in his Paris studio. The little fisherman is from Ostend, Belgium. The chinaman is a beautiful, hand carved one that had lived in Hop Alley in Denver for more than 50 years and was old long before that. The Indian prince came from Bombay. In the carnival costume is the boy from Belgium. The little boy with the accordion, which really plays, I bought in the Music Hall, where just two weeks later they tried to assassinate Hitler. The small doll, on lap of old man, is a replica of one of my grandsons, made by an artist in Chicago. The old man with pipe in mouth is wax. He came from Mexico City. After hunting the town over for something unusual I found him in the corner of a little shop on a small side street. He has a wife who is just as interesting as he is. In fact many of these boys and men have mates, but being strictly a "male" picture they had to be excluded.

the meantime, here are some splendid notes about Mr. Crabtree's boy dolls, which were prepared by John Craig for the Chicago Daily News:

"The reason we went to see L. D. Crabtree is that he collects dolls that once belonged to boys. Has around 600 of them. A tall, wide man with a rosy face and white hair, he met us at the door of his stuccoed home on the South Side, wearing a hunting cap and a checkered woolen shirt.

"He'd been doing some outside chores, he explained, leading the way through a front room filled with an assortment of antiques, which he also collects, to the kitchen, where a kettle hissed cozily on the stove. Crabtree is a bachelor, he mentioned, and lives as he likes.

As to the dolls, he said he got started with them because of the affection displayed by his adopted sister, eight years younger than he, for a doll that she owned. "When I was about 14 I crossed one of its eyes, just as a joke, and the grief she suffered impressed me so much I began to take an interest in dolls myself."

Begins With a Gift

"With that beginning, he had only those that had belonged to girls in his collection until an old woman came to his kitchen door, begging. He gave her food, and during the next eight months she dropped in often to eat. Never told him her name, but confided that she was 87 years old and spoke seven languages.

"She didn't know about my hobby," he recalled, but one day she brought along a doll, saying that it had belonged to her son, who had been dead for 47 years, and that she wanted me to have it. I never saw her again."

"From that time on, he's specialized in dolls that belonged to men, or, as he put it, 'to men who had kept them since childhood.' They're not easy to get, either. He's found that as a rule a man is more reluctant than a woman to give one up. As an example, he's been working for years without success on 'a big 6-foot 2-inch guard at Joliet prison who has a doll that he hangs onto as if he were its mother.'

"Crabtree says he had obtained most of his assortment through people who have either seen or heard of his front cabinets in which the dolls are displayed. Most of them are of the type with china heads, and on the chest of each is a square of cloth, bearing a name. He pointed to one labeled 'Lulu.'

"Lulu," he said, 'belonged to a boy who named her for his childhood sweetheart. But he married another girl, and the first one gave me the doll.'

"Crabtree is not sure which of his possessions is the oldest. One, made of china, was presented to him seven years ago, and at that time he was told it was 119 years old. Another, given by a priest in Ireland to a woman leaving for this country, is around 100, he estimates, and some others have long, authentic histories.

"Although the room was lighted, Crabtree turned a flashlight on the faces of the various dolls and said, 'See their expressions? They all look different.'"

FEATHERS

By DOROTHY FOSTER BROWN

IN THE eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, feathers were sometimes put to strange uses. Clusters of them surmounted canopied beds; and they were occasionally used to decorate not only hearses but the horses that drew them! On buttons, however, they are displayed in more suitable company—or by themselves. From feathers to wings (made of feathers), to birds (including eagles!) is but a few steps; wings are also worn by angels, cupids and dragons; while both wings and feathers adorn hats, helmets, war-bonnets, and other miscellaneous headgear. When all these things are considered, feathers on buttons become so plentiful as to reach almost smothering proportions! But "Feather Buttons," in ordinary parlance, are those which show feathers exclusively, or in whose designs feathers play an important part.

Ostrich plumes and peacock feathers seem to predominate on buttons; probably because they are so graceful and characteristic; and, in the case of the former, have long been used for personal adornment.

No. 1. Peacock feathers form the charming border on this bronze button, which is slightly convex, with raised surface design, c. 1840? There is an old superstition that peacock feathers bring bad luck, especially if they are brought into or kept in a house. But judging from their prevalence on buttons, the superstition is not taken very seriously.

No. 2 is a small, convex button of Vegetable Ivory, with a single ostrich plume cut in its surface. The striking simplicity of the natural-colored feather against the dark ground is further proof that a button need not be intrinsically valuable to be original and distinctive. Self-shank.

No. 3. This convex brass button is delicately tinted in shades of blue and buff. As in No. 2, the single plume makes a graceful and effective design. Self-shank, c. 1900-1910.

No. 4 is an Heraldic button, silvered, convex, with raised design and scalloped border. The ostrich plumes rise from what appears to be a ducal coronet, but I cannot identify the device. I am in hopes that someone more familiar than I am with heraldry and regalia will "place" it for me. Reverse: "R. E. Hayward-London."

No. 5 shows a goose feather, in the form of a quill (pen?). The button is of black Plastic Horn, with plain border and background of fine lines. c. 1860.

No. 6. This peacock feather is of brass, against a background of dark green velvet. The design is good, and it is characteristic of Feather buttons that they have no top nor bottom, but, like conventional patterns, look equally good in any position. c. 1880.

No. 7 shows three ostrich feathers on a flat brass button, with self-shank. c. 1900-1915? Another decorative arrangement of three feathers is shown in "Button Parade" (p. 74, No. 2); and accurate representations of the famous Prince of Wales' badge may be found on Military and Livery buttons.

No. 8 is a Campaign button, convex brass with raised design, tin back. "The Plumed Knight" (so-called by Colonel Robert Ingersoll) was James G. Blaine (1830-1893), brilliant American statesman and unsuccessful candidate for president in 1884. (Blaine and Logan were defeated by Cleveland and Hendricks; all four are commemorated on buttons.) These "plumes," it seems to me, bear a strong resemblance to roosters' tail feathers! 1884.

No. 9 shows another peacock feather, in silver lustre on black glass. A similar design, with shank instead of holes, is found in iridescent Jet. ("Button Parade," p. 88, No. 17).

No. 10 is a "Goofy" of Modern Plastic, appropriately rendered in red and brown—among other colors. The war-bonnet is probably made of eagle feathers. There are many be-feathered head-dresses on buttons: hats of various kinds, both men's and women's, ancient and modern; also helmets of different types,—Norman, Medieval and Classical; (though Classical helmets, I believe, were usually ornamented with "plumes" of horsehair.) It might be interesting to collect examples of feathered headgear,—they are so plentiful and so varied. A surprising number of wings (unattached) can be found on buttons, too; many of them on Uniform buttons.

No. 11 shows still another peacock feather, in brass against a black ground, and with the feather motif repeated in the border. Reverse: "Rd. No. 475130."

There are buttons which feature real feathers. *Mrs. Ethel B. Cassidy, the Button Material specialist, mentions two of this type: one is the "tip end of a peacock feather under glass"; the other, a "button of kingfisher feathers, set in gold." Since butterflies are covered with minute feathers, the rare buttons showing real butterflies are also "feather" types. But ordinarily, the name "Feather" refers to subject rather than material, when applied to buttons.

A little search will show that feathers, like so many other button subjects, hardly have to be looked for, once attention has been drawn to their possibilities; they are much more in evidence than one might think, at first glance.

If it isn't exactly feasible to "feather one's nest" with buttons, at least, they can be a "feather in one's cap,"—metaphorically if not actually! And certainly, button collectors are a most notable example of the fact (if it is a fact) that "birds of a feather flock together!"

*"What Are Little Buttons Made Of?" by Ethel B. Cassidy, 1943.

KOSSUTH COMMEMORATIVE BUTTON

By LON TWAIN

THIS RARE button is in the Museum of the Waterbury Button Company, now called Waterbury Companies Inc., and is lent to the writer by the courtesy of William F. Kaynor, president, and Mrs. W. J. Gilpatrick, curator. Another specimen, with a stud back, is in the collection of the Essex Institute at Salem, Mass. Several private collectors also have this item.

The name of the subject on the front is given in words above and below the bust: "Governor of Hungary—Kossuth." The inscription on the back, in double circles around the shank, is: "O. W. Minard—H. W. Hayden's—Patent 1851—Waterbury."

The picture of Kossuth is not so dim, visible only when turned properly to the light, as the Clay button of similar construction which collectors refer to as "oblique." But it is inscribed like some of the Clay heads, by a process for which, I believe, the trade has had no exact name, but which a diemaker refers to as "incised" or "engraved" with "lines just deep enough to cast a shadow," or perhaps best described by the terms "mat finish" or "light engine turning."

This a significant historical piece. Glass collectors are familiar with the Kossuth Bottle made when the noted exile visited this country or England. The reverse of that article shows a design of the frigate Mississippi on which he arrived. This is the ship which Kossuth took from Gibraltar to England in September of 1851.

(Louis) Lojos Kossuth was born in 1802. He became a leader of the youthful and liberal rebels, and was imprisoned for his writings. He demanded more liberties for the peasants, and advocated the abolition of the feudal system and the freedom of the press. When Metternich fell from power, Kossuth became Minister of Finance on the cabinet. He was the brain and spirit of the great patriotic movement which antagonized other nationalities and promoted the cause of the Magyars. When the Slavic peoples in the south opposed this policy, Austria had its chance; and then Austria and the Croats allied themselves in war. Kossuth was dictator of Hungary, the organizer, the man who got the credit for National Defense. He demanded that Hungary be supreme, that the Hapsburgs forfeit their throne, and he announced Hungarian independence. In 1849 he became Governor of Hungary. When days were dark for his hopes, he trusted that the western powers would interfere on behalf of small nations; but Czar Nicholas of Russia lent his strength to support of the Hapsburgs. When Gorgey surrendered, Kossuth was defeated and fled to Turkey.

From the first his cause had aroused sympathy in the United States, but the American public did not want to be drawn into a foreign quarrel. When Fillmore succeeded to the Presidency in 1850, Daniel Webster, becoming Secretary of State, championed the interests of Kossuth, and carried on a significant correspondence with Chevalier Hulsemann, the Austrian Minister, in which he bravely espoused the duty of this country to recognize Kossuth as chief of the new Hungarian Republic and to foster "responsible and popular government in any part of the world." At that time we had plenty of nationalistic isolationists, among them many of the leading clergymen. Theodore Parker of Boston was one who spoke emphatically on "The Chief Sins of the People," and in April of 1851 asked: "Wilt thou welcome the Hungarian hero, and yet hold slaves, and hunt poor Negroes through thy land?"

When, in December of 1851, the ship Humbolt steamed into the New York Harbor, twenty-one guns at the Battery saluted a welcome to the Hungarian patriot. As the Countess Lola Montez, noted mistress of Mad King Ludwig of Bavaria, heard the thunderous tribute, she thought it was a greeting for herself; and when she realized that she was less honoured than Kossuth, she, the proud English favourite of a ruler, retired in pique to her cabin. She considered the boastful Magyar a humbug; and she took great delight in the fact that the reporters gave her more attention than they gave to the eminent foreign visitor.

His mission here was doomed to failure. By July of '52 he was back in England, where he remained till 1862, a disappointed exile; and then he went to Turin where he stayed till his death in 1894.

Just why the button was manufactured, at whose behest, and for what use intended, I have been unable to determine. Perhaps a document will come to light from hidden files to reveal that there was an enormous sale to persons anxious to wear these insignia to show their faith in interventionism and their enthusiasm for carrying democracy to central Europe, or to prove that some Waterburyites who admired Kossuth had a special set of buttons made to present to the distinguished visitor to wear on his coat—while holding a remainder for themselves and future button hunters in Yankee attics. O. W. Minard, whose name appears on the button, was active in public affairs in the City of Brass, and was engaged in the metal industry. Hiram W. Hayden made some of the earliest chased buttons produced in this country. For Scoville and Company he made important dies from 1841 to 1853. In December of 1851 he got a special patent for improving the quality of brass kettles. O. W. Minard had been engaged in a similar specialty. At that very time they seem to have cooked up together, in their witches' cauldron, an idea for honoring Kossuth for his pilgrimage of propaganda to this country. Whether they let Kossuth know of their commemorative gesture, we do not know; whether he carried any of them back to his own country, we cannot tell; but we trust that G. I. Joes visiting German museums captured in little countries may return some of the specimens to their native state.

The writer will appreciate news of further Kossuth items in the possession of button collectors. There should be a record of the discovery of these meaningful pieces, which were not mere ornaments of dress; and we should be eager to unearth all relevant data about them. I hope we shall find that Minard and Hayden of Waterbury were at the Battery, buttons in hand, to present the first strikes from the mint to the incoming patriot. They do not seem to be listed among the earliest Americans to button-hole Kossuth at the pier, or to dine with him and the Big Brass who planned his metropolitan reception.

—o— BUTTON FORUM

May I add my bit to the article of Dorothy Foster Brown about flag buttons in the July HOBBIES?

I believe the E was on the buttons of all officers of the American Export Lines.

Before the war there were four Export Line "Aces," de luxe passenger freighters that ran between New York and the near East,—the Exochorda, Excambian, Exeter, and Excalibur." Other Export Line freighters were in the "tramp" category, I believe, having no regular routes.

Two of my sons, both deck officers on the "Excambian" and the "Exochorda" used the E buttons pictured in the article. I have heard that all four of the Export "Aces" were sunk in World War II.

I was interested in Lon Twain's article on glass buttons, which I collect in preference to any other kind. Call them swirls, whirls, or whorls as you will, an old glass maker described them to me as an "upside down paperweight" button.

He said the flowered core was made the same in both cases; in the ball paperweight the clear glass covering was poured on the core from the top. While in the upside down one the core is pushed into a mold partially filled with clear glass, being made upside down, so to speak.

Are cameo buttons very common? I have just found an oval, light colored, cameo bearing the Masonic emblem. Perhaps a man's shirt button?

—Alice R. Shockley, Massachusetts

—o— Miniature Garden on a Button

Mrs. Carleton Casebolt, California, has found a use for those old, large coat buttons which go begging in button boxes. She makes miniature gardens on these old, unwanted types. One that she sent to the museum of HOBBIES showed a miniature Mexican carefully modelled with a pack on his back amid cactus in miniature form.

These specimens are particularly interesting to the miniaturia collector and also Natural History lovers.

FAMOUS LINCOLN LOG CABIN

Its Mysterious Fate

By ELEANOR GRIDLEY

Published Posthumously

Part V

It was a bitter, bitter disappointment that tortured for many a day. The famous log cabin—Abraham Lincoln's humble home had been disowned, rejected. My heart was broken.

The members of the association were fairly paralyzed. Their plans were frustrated and a fortune, by no means small, had been expended. The cabin, alone, cost ten thousand dollars; its upkeep, consisting of guard, attendants, caretakers, and rent all together with architects' and photographer's service, salaries, advertising and other expenditure, had exhausted the association's assets, and now that there was no prospect of immediate revenue, the situation was distressing—exasperating.

The South Annex of the Exposition Building was now completely demolished. The razing of the North Annex—the cabin's shelter—was next in order. An official notice, "Further accommodation cannot be extended," necessitated the immediate removal of the log cabin. The cabin was a huge and cumbersome structure of two rooms, each eighteen by eighteen feet and separated by a large clumsy chimney—the space between, "boarded-up" with heavy siding. The logs were huge and long, the flooring and roofing was made of thick slabs and the bricks that fashioned the chimney and fireplace, were many. It was, indeed, a big job to take the cabin apart, move it carefully and reconstruct it accurately. Just alone to do that would involve a heavy financial outlay. The situation baffles description.

Mr. George M. Bogue, president of the Abraham Lincoln Log Cabin Association, had been ill for some time. His physician fearing a nervous collapse advised complete rest, a radical change of climate, and an indefinite period of absence.

Mr. Bogue's, "Come to the office for final instructions," I complied with it at once, and in response to his earnest solicitation I promised to assume the responsibility of securing, for the cabin, further shelter; to supervise its removal and to continue my stewardship until his return.

It was, indeed, a difficult and burdensome task I had promised to undertake. Immediately I set about securing a proper location on which to re-erect the log cabin as a permanent exhibit and I intended to solicit contributions with which to finance the enterprise.

The members of the association doubted the feasibility of "Such an enterprise at such a time." My enthusiasm and determination, however, won their consent and I set out on my crusade. At every turn of the game I met either delay or defeat.

When an imperative and final notice—"Impossible to grant further accommodation. Cabin must be moved," was served such frenzied excitement prevailed among the members of the association (all of the members being men except myself) that I was amused rather than alarmed.

At this time there was in the near downtown district of Chicago, an attractive and popular exhibit, owned and operated by Mr. Charles A. Gunther, a well known citizen. The building containing the Gunther collection was originally a tobacco factory, in Richmond, Virginia. The Confederate Government had appropriated the structure and "Libby Prison" became the official prison in which captured Union soldiers were confined. The building was purchased, taken down, brought to Chicago, rebuilt and equipped with an extensive collection of historical war equipment, ancient and modern.

Hoping to interest Mr. Gunther, I called on the veteran collector. Although he appeared to be perfectly indifferent to any proposition I made, I ventured to explain our extremity and succeeded in securing storage space within the enclosure about the "Libby Prison." I paid, in advance, a month's rent, which seemed to me exorbitant and departed an anxious woman and no wiser.

The famous Lincoln log cabin was demolished, removed and piled up on the allotted space. Before I could advise Mr. Bogue and ask for further instruction, news of his sudden and unexpected death fairly stunned me.

Who would take his place? I could not select one member of the association capable of carrying out the late presidential plans he had so carefully and intelligently designed. His enthusiasm, his intense personal interest kept his working forces in line. Had he lived, his dogged persistency and abiding faith, would have eventually resulted in the fulfillment of his cherished desire.

"Special Meeting Notice," was sent to every member of the association. It read: "A serious situation has arisen. A distressing problem requires immediate solution." "What can we do?" was the distressing problem. It elicited a lively and inharmonious discussion, which yielded no satisfactory results. A resolution, continuing the cryptic word, "Finis" was offered, adopted and the association declared dissolved.

I did not abandon hope. Ignoring the advice of friends I continued my efforts; striving to secure a location, trying to interest influential citizens and believing that ultimately the log cabin would be re-built as a permanent structure, containing volumes of Lincoln lore, valuable historic relics and souvenirs, and with an endowment to ensure its maintenance for all time. With an abiding faith I continued my efforts and now and then looked in upon the dismantled old log cabin, awaiting its fate.

At last when patience had almost ceased to be a virtue, I found a suitable location, at a reasonable price. Consulting several wealthy and influential citizens of Chicago, especially those who admired Abraham Lincoln, I was advised by one, who seemed particularly interested, to ascertain, first, the amount due on storage and also be prepared to estimate other expenditures.

I had not been able for a long time to pay the storage rent. Mr. Gunther thought it business-like to be paid in full before releasing the log cabin material. And I was afraid to report the situation.

TWO ROOSEVELT ITEMS STOLEN FROM EXHIBIT

More than 1,000 patrons were held being searched on September 24th when it was discovered that two items from the estate of the late President Roosevelt had been stolen from an arts and antiques show in the 71st regiment armory, New York,

N. Y.

The stolen exhibits were listed as a color print of a navy vessel, "The U. S. Frigate Macedonian in Distress," and a collection of Brazilian stamp issues and covers, presented to President Roosevelt in 1940 by President Vargas of Brazil, and autographed by both men.

The stolen items had been loaned by Mrs. Roosevelt from the Roose-

THE WORLD PATTERN OF 1883

By THELMA SHULL

DURING THE eighteen eighties, when so much of the brown transfer-printed earthenware was made in complete table services, there appeared on the market a rather unusual pattern printed in brown against an ivory background named The World. It was registered in the English patent office on April 25, 1883 and continued to be made for some time. Wallis Gimson and Company were the potters producing this attractive pattern.

The plates and cup and saucer shown in the illustration are pictured through the courtesy of Gabel Antiques, Glendale, California. Gabel Antiques is one of the oldest antique shops in the state, being in business since 1925.

Notice the narrow conventional border around each piece in the illustration. Orchids, prunus blossoms, and butterflies were used as background decorations. The borders that trimmed the brown patterns that were popular during these years varied in width from about three-eighths of an inch to one-and-one-fourth inches. On the cup and saucer, two rows of geometric repetitive designs form the border, which is three-eighths of an inch wide. On the plates and other large pieces the inner geometric pattern is repeated, so that there are three rows of geometric designs. The inner two are the same, but are alternated in arrangement, so that the darker square in the middle row is over the lighter square in the inner row. The border on the plates is five-eighths of an inch wide.

It is obvious that the name of the pattern is derived from the various scenes and buildings decorating the different pieces, many countries of the world being represented.

On the ten-inch plate, shown in the right in the illustration, is a view of the Vale of Avoca. Below it is a quotation taken from Thomas Moore's poem, "The Meeting of the Waters," one of the Irish Melodies. In 1807 the poet visited in the county of Wicklow where the rivers of Avon and Avoca meet. This romantic spot, the Vale of Avoca, was the inspiration for his verse, the first two lines of which are printed on the plate.

"There is not in the wide world a valley so sweet

As that vale in whose bosom the bright waters meet."

The smaller picture on the ten-inch plate is of "Temple Bar," a gateway designed by Sir Christopher Wren. It once stood in London and was removed about sixty years ago to the entrance of Theobald's Park near Cheshunt, Herfordshire. Formerly, when the king entered the city in state, often through Temple Bar, the Lord Mayor met him and presented the sword of the city to him, which he at once returned. This was an ancient English custom.

On the nine-inch plate, also illustrated, are framed pictures of the "Rhine Bridge and Palace" and the "Staircase of the Bruhl Terrace, Dresden." The "Tower of London" and the "Jewel Room" embellish the seven-inch plates.

The oblong covered tureen measures 11½ inches in length, including the handles, and 6½ inches in width. A spray of orchids decorates the bowl; but the cover has a view of "Castle Garden, New York," and a portrait of "George Washington." On the nine-inch square tureen are pictures of Japanese buildings.

The cups and saucers are especially attractive. The saucers measure 5½ inches in diameter and the cups 3½ inches across the top and 2¼ inches in height. The saucers are especially attractive with scenes from "St. Paul's Cathedral" and "Netley Abbey." The abbey was founded in 1237, and ivy covered ruins are all that remain. On one side of the cup is a view of "Morecambe," a town in Lancashire. On the other side, illustrated, is a view of "Sandringham" House, a county seat of the sovereign, which was acquired by King Edward VII in 1861. This beautiful home is surrounded by an estate of seven thousand acres, which includes a park of two hundred acres. On other cups, the same size as that just mentioned, are pictures of "Traitor's Gate" and "Crystal Palace, Interior." Soup plates and platters were also made in this pattern, as were probably many other pieces decorated with interesting world scenes.

With such an attractive dinner service on the table, world travelers would be provoked to reminisce, school children would find their geography and history lessons made infinitely more realistic; and everyone at the table would undoubtedly comment on one or more of the scenes and places before them. And since a pleasant conversational theme in which everyone participates assures a successful meal, these dishes should make any woman who uses them on her table a successful hostess.

I am going to sell HOBBIES

Unless we can get help to relieve us of the grief we have gone through the last four years. Eastern publishers have made us an attractive offer for HOBBIES which we must decide upon between now and the first of the year. We are determined to settle the help question or retire from business.

We need printers and linotype operators which are not procurable in Chicago. Some towns have not been, in the least, affected by the War. There may be in such places, young or old men in these trades who want to come to Chicago for personal reasons or for the high wages paid here.

Will any of our readers who have appreciated our efforts lend a hand to carry this message to any printer who might be interested? We start boys without the least experience at 75c an hour, but prefer experienced men. I learned my trade at $3 a week and worked ten hours a day, six days a week.

The Publisher's Page

President Truman has done some good service in getting things straightened out. Naturally, we all do not agree with him on every point, but if a public servant acts conscientiously and with good judgment, that is all we can ask. We have had plenty of public servants who did neither.

One thing more he should do, however, is to get in that new automobile, take a sledge hammer, ride over to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, and smash the control boxes on those printing presses. For Heaven's sake, quit printing that paper money. Every man, woman, and child, from every new born baby to every pauper, is carrying around $125 in currency. When the boom broke in 1929, we only had $43.00 per capita in printed currency. Something is bound to crack, if we do not quit cheapening our money. It is no credit to anyone to be at the head of a government whose unit of currency is disrespected. If we keep printing and putting out this paper money, it is only going to be a question of a very short time until a black market will spring up in gold. There is some of that going on right now. Suppose a man offers to sell you a house and lot for $5,000 but tells you he will let you have it for $3,000 if you have gold.

Do you know how much the American paper dollar is bringing on the Calcutta free gold market? This question ought to be openly discussed and the facts ought to be brought to the attention of the people in a more forceful manner than by simply asking them on the radio to quit spending money and to buy more bonds. That is not the solution of the problem that is facing us today. The solution needs stronger and sterner methods.

The first way to start a period of inflation that will lead to wreckage is to continue to pension a great number of non-producers, all spending paper money. The second way is to start a wave of wage increases that will lead to a continual spiral of higher prices until the dollar will mean nothing. If we are going to close our eyes to these facts just to cater to political pressure, we are only inviting a catastrophe that will cause suffering the like of which the country has never known.

oOo

We should have printed another sixteen pages this month, but the help was not available. Two of our best men were ill and we are lucky to get out the regular issue. We regret having to leave out so much advertising that was offered.

The help situation in Chicago has not improved a bit since the war ended. In fact, we hear from various parts of the country that there is still a considerable shortage of skilled help everywhere. Lately in answer to ads we have had a couple of veterans apply for the first time. One of them wanted a minimum of $75 a week. We asked him what he was getting when he went in the army. He said he was making thirty dollars a week. That spirit accounts for some of the shortage.

We also see on the streets of Chicago hundreds of girls in every type of service uniform. People tell us that situation exists in all the large cities. What is the idea in keeping these girls idly walking the streets of these cities? What possible service can they be rendering the Government? They are only adding to the tax payers' burdens and keeping help so scarce that over-time is added to the cost of production and delaying the return to normalcy. Are these girls, grown used to idleness going to be satisfied to go back to factory, office and farm work?

All of this is going to keep prices of civilian goods so high that the next thing we face will be a buyers' strike. Talk to these people who demand excessive wages and ask them if it is their intention to pay $1400 for an automobile that they could buy before the war for $900, and they will answer emphatically "no." If we are not permitted to adjust things so that manufacturers can produce within a reasonable cost compared to pre-war prices, we are going to face the same condition we did after the last war. The public will refuse to pay such high prices, and then factories will have to let off help because they cannot sell their goods at such prices.

One of the reasons for the scarcity of skilled labor is that we have not trained any apprentices for the last four years. It is sickening to see the swarms of boys marching down the street to depots headed for army camps. These boys should be either finishing school or learning a trade. If a boy does not learn a trade in his teens, when he is pushed into it by his parents, he will never learn. When he is twenty-one, he thinks he is a man and can do as he pleases. He then floats around from one thing to another, unskilled in anything, and usually becomes a n'er-do-well.

These boys will be old men before we can afford to fight another war. It is true that we are headed for a war with Russia. That is plain to everyone, but we must get our economy in order first. The country needs twenty or twenty-five years normal adjustment before we can go into another war. Churchill thought he was popular enough to be reelected, and some think it was his intention to inveigle us into an immediate war with Russia while we had our army in Europe.

The next war will see Britain, Germany, the United States, and Japan on one side, fighting Russia, China, and India—the latter for her independence. On our side we still have three hundred million people. The other side will have nine hundred million people. Both sides will use the atomic bomb, but defense will be discovered that will greatly reduce its destructive power.

—o—

There has been more or less discussion on the subject of dealers' lists of late. Once in a while we get a complaint from a reader who has bought something that is under dispute from a list advertised in HOBBIES.

HOBBIES assumes a tacit responsibility for material specifically advertised in our columns, and we have very little trouble getting adjustments when complaints arise. Our policy is that the reader must be satisfied, and we ask the advertiser to bend backward to that end. Otherwise, we do not want to run his advertising.

We do not, however, think our policy should be extended to people who advertise lists. At least two or three hundred of our advertisers get out lists, and if you buy from the list instead of through HOBBIES, you do it on your own responsibility. In several cases where we got more than one complaint, we refused to carry in the magazine thereafter, any mention of lists. Until we get complaints, however, we have a right to assume that the dealers are carrying on a perfectly legitimate business. Certainly anyone has the right to be assumed innocent until he is proven guilty. If you have had trouble buying through lists, let us know, and we will discontinue any mention of lists in that particular dealer's ads.

Neither can we assume responsibility for the acts of an advertiser in his own store. Occasionally we get letters from people who got into a dispute with a dealer about something they bought in their store. The buyer then thinks they should not be allowed to advertise in HOBBIES. Naturally, we have no right to assume any jurisdiction whatever over someone else's private acts. These disputes should be settled between those who are involved. Sometimes both have their side in the dispute, and it would take a Solomon to decide between them. At any rate, we do not feel that such disputes are any of our business, and we are not looking for trouble to the extent of taking part in it.

—o—

HOBBIES readers who attend the Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair, November 12-17 of this year, may visit HOBBIES Museum on Wednesday afternoon, November 14. The group will start through at 2 P. M. promptly. Because of the extreme shortage of help, this is the only time it will be held open.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK

The name of the maker has been obliterated from the dial by years of cleaning. The word "Town" can be dimly seen, and is thought to have been made by William Lee at Charles Town, S. C. around 1717. (The same is now Charlestown.)

Clock men who have examined it, say it dates back to early 1700. The works are of brass, and hand made. It tells the tide, phases of the moon, and days of the month. Strikes the hour. Is in fine running order.

Case is burled walnut, chamfered corners, once feet. Plumes at top are hand carved. All people who have seen this clock say it is really a museum piece. It is 8 feet tall. mp Priced $1850.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON

The first-day sale of the postage stamp commemorating the achievements of the United States Navy in World War II, took place at Annapolis, Maryland, on October 27, the day of first issue.

The central design is an informal group of seamen in summer uniforms. The stamp carries a single line frame. In a narrow dark panel at the bottom center is the lettering, "United States Postage" in white architectural Roman. On the left of this panel is a heavy outline frame counter with the denomination "3c" in dark architectural Roman on a shady background. On the right is a similar counter with the lettering "U. S. Navy" in dark Gothic.

Erratum: In the report of postage stamp plate numbers issued during the month of June, 1945, dated July 5, 1945, the word "Book" was omitted in the description of 3c Ordinary stamp plate Nos. 23291 and 23292.

The first-day sale of the Roosevelt Memorial Stamp, at Hyde Park, N.Y., July 26, 1945, were as follows:
Covers canceled . . . 390,219
Stamps sold1,625,000 $16,250.00

It was announced at the Post Office Department that the Railroad Commemorative Stamp was removed from sale at the Philatelic Agency at the close of business on August 31, 1945.

oOo

Postmaster General Robert E. Hannegan has announced that a commemorative postage stamp will be issued in honor of Alfred E. Smith.

The stamp honoring the former New York Governor will be of the 3-cent denomination. The first-day sale will be conducted at New York, N. Y., on November 26.

Supplies

That there must be a very different viewpoint on the future supply of material here and abroad. At least, the mail makes the disagreement quite obvious. The trade here seems to think there are plenty supplies of everything. Personal letters from trade friends abroad are exactly the opposite.

We will have to wait and see, but evidently some can't wait—and because they cannot, they expose the fact that they are pressing to fill pre-war areas with pre-war issues, especially where the countries have suffered the robbing and wrecking of the Nazis or the bombing and blitzing of the Allies, the latter doubtless the worst for the storage bins of the wholesalers.

Many of these countries have difficult items, unusual discrepancies and some omissions due to the trouble breaking just before the declaration of war, or the taking over of an area for "protective custody."

Several questions have arisen. One, selected because it covers the matter fully, I will quote.

"I have Czechoslovenska No. 212 (Scott) which is the Masaryk face to left and wearing military cap. This is easily placed and no sub-varieties listed. This appears again as No. 256 with the line 'Type of 1935 with hyphen between Czecho-Slovensko.'"

"I find that the supply I have, used, does not show the hyphen easily. But if the catalog added the fact, which is used abroad as an easier mark, 'The value tablet is 1Kc and on the 1935 item the value is 1K—the small 'c' being omitted. As there are two tablets and the omitted 'c' is easily seen, the hunting for a hyphen, possibly covered by a cancellation is much eased."

That chap is very mild mannered and polite. An encyclopaedia should show these facts, all of them, not one alone. And if you try to find the 1935 item, the way is to look at the value tablets.

Topicals

"Topicals" again hit a new high. "Flags" and Iwo Jima is, of course, the spur and the required starter.

But you'll be surprised to see how many "flag" items are added in the last five years. It was five years back that "Flags" were listed as a topical title.

But we still want a U. S. flag in colors. Why not? Of course the Bureau "isn't fitted to do color work" But no matter. The ones that printed the "Overrun nations" flags could do better on something patriotic.

Plenty others have done our flag in colors, why not the U. S.?

Questions

There are some questions as to the reasons for the new Italian issue having the watermark of the last pre-Swastika watermark, German issues.

None has fully answered the question. The same man (house or paper maker) may have had the paper handy and the Italian P. O. took what it could get. The paper is surely not Italian in origin.

And it appears on other stamps in this hemisphere. The final "why" will be interesting. It is a pity we do not add notes as to paper makers and the sources of papers, watermarks on the issues, and the reasons for contractual changes, if this is the reason for change.

Of course some of this can be added to our knowledge, which we need if we write up our pages, by use of Philatelic publications from abroad.

No one here ever stopped to think that the cost of these things is quite an item, and energetic collectors who buy for their own libraries such extra books, catalogs, P. O. brochures and lists, take just that much money away from the dealers here.

An example is the Swedish P. O. publication on the Coil issues that was recently translated and published for the translator, a Chicago man. Printed in Swedish, yes, but as easy to use as the translation, and "official." No catalog would follow the extreme classifications and differences this book contains. You use that or go on your own. But it is well worth study.

WATCH FOR THESE

Three Cape Colony Triangular Stamps have been stolen from Hobbies Museum and may be offered for sale. $100. reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest of the thief.

NUMISMATIC THOUGHTS

By FRANK C. ROSS

Advertisement Notes

With the intense interest so many people are now taking in coin collecting, many heretofore "stocking" and "heirloom" coins and paper money are coming to light, and among the paper money some obsolete bank notes are showing up with advertisements on one side of them. Never having seen, and unable to conceive of paper money with an advertisement thereon, finders naturally assume their newly found notes are spurious. To prevent the loss to numismatics of such historical specimens, and the premium values to the finders, it is well to again advise novices that this currency is not always just an advertising canard, and that such notes should be preserved; in fact the advertisements might give them added value. As was mentioned in HOBBIES at the time, several years ago a $3 note issued by the Drovers Bank of Utah in July, 1856, turned up at a Kansas City coin club meeting. The entire back of the note was taken up with an advertisement of a St. Joseph, Missouri fish dealer. On account of the advertisement some collectors doubted its genuineness. It was referred to D. C. Wismer, America's foremost authority on paper money and bank notes, and he replied: "The advertisement really proves the genuineness of the note; many of the old bank notes were used in this way. There must have been hundreds of them. They were handed out as interesting advertisements, and kept by many recipients for a period and then thrown away and destroyed, so that notes with advertisements on the back are really rare. The notes of the River Raisin and Lake Erie R. R. Co. of Monroe, Michigan, were extensively used in Philadelphia for advertisements by at least ten different merchants, and it is remarkable how few have survived."

Safe-Guard Your Tokens

Eternal vigilance is the price of safety of our coins, and one cannot too often sound a warning to the many new collectors entering the field each year of the pitfalls awaiting novices. Most metals are allergic to certain chemical actions, specially noticeable in tin and pewter. Lodge "pennies," church communion tokens, medals, badges and other like specimens are on the active list of collectors, and most of them contain a preponderance of tin and pewter, both metals susceptible to the "disease" that Mr. Paul M. Lange in an article in HOBBIES some years back termed "tinpest." His warning is worth repeating for the benefit of the many HOBBIES readers that have entered the field since then. Specimens of tin or pewter should be kept in a dry warm place, otherwise they will become coated with a gray dust, and unless "stitched in time" will "dust away," actually disappear in a cloud of dust, victims of the dread disease tinpest. If, he says, one of your specimens becomes afflicted, give it a bath in a five per cent solution of Hydrochloric (Muriatic) acid until the gray deposit is entirely removed, then rinse in warm water and dry with a soft cloth.

Recollections of an Old Collector

By THOMAS L. ELDER

Catalogs Without References

THERE HAS been a tendency in recent years for catalogers to ignore references in their catalogs, particularly sale catalogs.

The reasons for this are, it seems to the writer, due to hurry in catalog preparation, or carelessness. European catalogs have always been notable for the number of references to books and plates. In a recent important sale here we see an entire lack of references to such standard books as Crosby and Gilbert. The failure to cite references was chiefly in the case of Colonial American coins and failure to cite the work on half cents. It shows no sort of scholarly cataloging to omit numbers on the half cents of 1793, 1794, 1804, 1809 etc.; it shows neglect or indifference to the needs of collectors, the best of whom collect by Crosby and Gilbert and not by the cataloger's ideas. Also we note an absence of references to such well known standard works as Heiss, Fennel, Grueber and the best standard works on Greek and Roman coins. In compiling the noted Appleton sale, the H. C. Miller sale, the Skilton, the Lawrence sale and others of like calibre the writer did a lot of heavy work in looking up references to dozens of the best books on coins. It is a big mistake to neglect the best works on coins and tokens and keep the beginner and amateur in semantic darkness. Seldom are Hawkins, Kenyon or Ruding referred to in the listing of English or Anglo-Saxon coins? If catalogers would use Grueber, they could give the exact date of issue on all the undated coins of Elizabeth. There are 12 varieties of 1804 half cents. A mere description doesn't tell one much of anything about an 1804 half cent. Gilbert tells the story. Also there has been a marked paucity recently in the cataloging of numismatic books and catalogs for collectors. The fine old catalogs of reference of the Chapmans and Lows are seldom mentioned or offered. Yet the Chapmans made the finest catalogs ever issued in this country.

Every good collector of American coins should have the Bushnell, Cleneay, Parmelee, Stickney, H. P. Smith, Zug catalogs and those of other similar collections. The John Story Jenks catalog, by Henry Chapman, is a monumental work for any collector to possess. It represents the greatest effort ever made by an American collector to portray the complete description of both American and foreign coins. This catalog has something like 750 pages, and is a large folio.

The attainment of a complete collection of cents does not necessarily make one a real numismatist. It is only the collector who studies his catalogs and references work out who becomes the real collector, the genuine numismatist. Our collectors should be encouraged to attain this end.

Recent High Prices For U. S. Coins

At a sale held a few months ago these prices were registered: U. S. Dime 1894 S. Mint, uncirculated, sold for $2,350, probably a world's record. All the S. and C. C. Mint dimes sold for good prices, a spectator told me. Proof 2c bronze coins, not rare dates brought from $10 to $12.50, while a two cent piece of 1864, with small motto, formerly selling for about $2.50 brought $41. This coin is certainly not rare enough to be worth $41 or anything like it. The 1873 2c piece which I used to buy from Hepner at Pittsburg for $2 sold for $40. Big prices were realized for 3c and 5c coins dated 1877. The former sold for $50, the latter for $65, probably the highest prices on record. In the old days they sold for $2 apiece or less. It is plain to see that coins which seemed a drug at sales like my last held in 1940, are bringing big prices. It was only five years ago when many of these coins sold for only moderate prices. So the outlook seems for still higher prices.

One is able to understand this better as those have always been rare, but coins such as the above minor ones have never been considered rare enough to make them bring present day prices. It seems the ranks of collectors have so swollen recently that they march forward like an army in their demands sweeping all old traditions to the winds.

By LAWRENCE BOND ROMAINE

United States Indian Service.
Crow Agency, Montana Ty.
June, 15, 1886.

"Dear Rogers—

The report of the sunrise gun at Ft. Custer has just been heard.

Have I written you of Mr. Chandler's misfortune in being bitten by a rattlesnake while near his camp on the Big Horn? He was bitten on the 9th while teaching the Indian, at whose house he was, to thin out his little patch of corn. Mr. C. came to a hill that needed thinning very badly so he reached down to pull out several stalks when the snake struck him in the right hand between the thumb and index finger. He got the Indian to help him saddle his horse and rode into the Agency, a distance of ten or twelve miles—and the day was one of the warmest of the Summer. It is a wonder that he arrived. We had a pretty rough time at first with the Dr. away "as usual." Mrs. Chandler has been sick all morning—she bore the news very well after five or ten minutes. Doc Russell returned about 20 minutes after I started to work and can assure you I was very happy to turn the patient over to him.—His whole right side is greatly swollen but think after a week he will be ready to ride out again.

Horribly busy—as—usual—etc.

C. H. Barstow."

late though the Agent insisted that I go to bed. About seven o'clock last evening we found a candle in a barrel in the cow stable with hay twisted all around it so that in about ten minutes more the stable would have been in flames. This makes the sixth attempt to burn us out since Spring but unfortunately only two of the fires did much damage. The first when the blacksmith-shop was totally destroyed with a large amount of Gov't property stored in the loft, the second, when the Industrial Home was destroyed, the children barely escaping in their night dresses. We don't pray very much here but when we do it is all to the end that some of us be permitted to catch the scoundrel who is the cause of such anxiety and loss. If the Lord is kind in granting this petition, the Gov't will never have to bear the expense of a trial. You can judge what a state of anxiety we are in day and night—without the remotest idea who the guilty party may be—but probably, we learn some outside parties (who want the Reserve cut off immediately as far as Clarke's Fork Rim) have hired some man, white or RED we do not know, to do the work, knowing that this Agency will never be rebuilt, but, in case of its destruction, the Indians would at once move to the Little Horn.

We have just had another inspection by C. H. Howard, Brother of Gen. Howard—he stated in his report "that the clerk at the Crow Agency, as elsewhere, is the hardest worked man at the post!"—

The Colonel recommended that I be relieved of all duties not appertaining to my office as clerk. Doc Russell has returned and you can't think what a relief it is to be freed from the duties of treating the various ills found in a camp of three thousand Indians.

C. H. Barstow.

NOTES

(1) It must be understood that many of the men listed as gunsmiths may have also been gunmakers. In keeping with the thought presented by Col. Gluckman and L. D. Satterlee in their American Gun Makers, it may be correctly assumed that many of the early percussion gunsmiths tried their hand at some time or other at making a gun or rifle.

(2) Albert (sometimes listed as Alfred) Bolkenius was born in Rhine, Prussia, on Oct. 28, 1820. He learned his trade as a gunsmith early in life and came to America in 1847, moving one year later to Milwaukee where he maintained his business of repairing and manufacturing guns for over thirty years. In 1859 he married Miss Belle Simon, a native of Bohemia. Ever interested in natural

THE KENTUCKY RIFLE, by Dillin

The citizens of this country may well be proud that America is a Nation of Riflemen. In our war for Independence with England, it was aimed rifle fire that was the decisive factor. Then, as well as today, it is the man with the rifle who is depended upon to take and hold strategic points. In spite of the advances made by science in the method of waging modern war, it is still the Man with the Rifle who holds the balance of power. The Kentucky Rifle is the Grandfather of all our Rifles, and as such holds a distinctive place in our nation's history. This rifle and the plow carved a country out of the wilderness. To know and appreciate your "Kaintuck" you should by all means have a copy of this remarkable book. DeLuxe Leatherette Binding, $10.00 postpaid.

Mostly about Books

BOOKS ON WHALES AND WHALING

By E. LEE DORSETT

"The whale he shall still be dear to me,
When the midnight lamp grows dim;
For the student's book, and his favorite nook,

Are illumined by the aid of him.
From none of his tribe could we e'er imbibe

So useful, so blessed a thing,
The hand in hand we'll go on the land,
To hail him the Ocean King."

—SAILOR'S SONG.

Book collecting has many and varied angles and "the man who plays the flute dislikes the man who plays the fiddle." Far be it from me to deride the collector of rare first editions, rare and beautiful bindings, fore-edge printings and the various other ramifications of book collecting, but my wanderings have led me into other fields. I like "salt water" in my books so whales and whaling have become my latest hobby.

Books on whales and whaling are not too rare or expensive, since the number of collectors is limited. It often happens that choice "whaling" books are in rather shabby condition. They would make some of our "choosy" bibliophiles shed briny tears. Nevertheless, some of them, when cleaned, rebound, and placed on the shelf make quite nice items. Of course, should the collector in his searching be able to find a well-bound copy to replace his rather shabby volume, he should purchase the good one and place the old book among his duplicates.

If one attempts to enter the scientific side of whaling, he may be surprised at the number of books in English, German, French, and Italian, written from the standpoint of the zoologist. The writer has steered clear of this side of the hobby, but there have been several excellent books written on the anatomy of the whale that must be read if one is to have a fair knowledge of the subject.

A collection on whaling literature would be incomplete without, at least, a small collection of maps and charts referring to whaling grounds, also to books on navigation and seamanship. Whaling logs are rare, outside of museum libraries. Speaking of first editions, the log of a whaling ship is about the rarest first edition obtainable. A first edition of Melville's Moby Dick may be prized by a collector of first editions. Dealers and collectors of book "firsts" have always considered this book one of the jewels of the collector's library, but there are many other books of whaling that far surpass this volume, to my way of thinking. Charles Lee Lewis has written a book on nautical literature, "The Books of the Sea," and he quotes a list of the ten books of the sea. "Moby Dick" is not even mentioned. Bullen's book, "The Cruise of the Cachalot," is in sixth place and is called "the greatest whaling story." Kipling also states that Bullen's book is the best one on whaling. The three-volume edition of Moby Dick illustrated by Rockwell Kent is a beautiful item, however.

Some of the early "juvenile" story books telling of the early days of whaling contain many rare and unusual woodcuts of whales and whaling. Some books on voyages published before 1800 contain prints of whales, but these resemble the Sea-Serpent more than the whale. Rockwell Kent, Gordon Grant, Clifford Ashley, and George Wales, contemporary illustrators, have given us creditable pictures of these denizens of the deep and their captors.

Many whaling books have been produced that are classed as fiction but many of the fictional books on whaling are based on fact. Of course, some are written by authors who have never "smelled salt water."

The subject of whaling is not complete without a small collection of books on those countries and cities from which set forth those sturdy little vessels in search of the whale. Books containing the early history of whaling of New Bedford, Nantucket, Mystic, San Francisco, Dundee, Scotland, and Hull, England, Hawaii, New Zealand, Tasmania and the South Pacific.

Best by Test

New York—We are very pleased to tell you that results obtained from our previous advertisements with you have been far ahead of any we've had in similar mediums.—Melvin P. Wiser.

They Produced

New York—I have had several advertisements in your fine magazine in the past year, and have had excellent results from them.—Melvin Denson.

Kept 'Em Busy

Connecticut—Am sorry for the delay in sending in my advertisement. I had such a fine response to my last ad that it has taken all my time to pack and get off the glass sold.—Mrs. William Greig Walker.

Does Triple Duty

California—I could not get along without HOBBIES. I have ordered many articles through your advertisements and have had perfect satisfaction in almost all cases. I enjoy the articles very much and read every advertisement in the glass and china section particularly, as old glass is my hobby. Over the week-end, after receiving HOBBIES, I pass it down to a collector friend who keeps it for a few days and likewise orders from the advertisements. When she has finished, there is another who just likes to read HOBBIES and look at the pictures, so he has it for a few days. Then it is filed for future reference. So you see, it really works overtime.—Mrs. A. E. Chapin.

Thanks!

Indiana—It's such a wonderful magazine.—Mrs. Portland Disney.

Ultimate in Pleasure

Georgia—One can't afford to miss the things that give the most pleasure, so here is another year's subscription.—Mrs. Hunter Wynn.

You're Appointed a Colonel

Kentucky—I think your publisher's page is one of the best of many good pages in HOBBIES.—H. Glover Bennett.

But Plenty of Grief

New Jersey—Rather than take a chance of missing a copy of HOBBIES, the antiquer's Bible, I am enclosing a check for renewal. We appreciate it a lot that HOBBIES is still the magazine it was, if not better in spite of the prevailing trying conditions. You do deserve a lot of credit for the publication and its arrival to subscribers without the delay and excuses offered by so many others. Most other publications have had to combine one or two issues, some are received a half a month late, and on poorer paper, but HOBBIES seems to string along, in spite of everything.—H. E. Ross.

A Must

Texas—I cannot run the Long Ago Shop without HOBBIES.—Mrs. J. Kone.

They Have the Punch

Tennessee—Let me congratulate you on the effectiveness of your ads.—Mrs. R. A. Davis.

Passes the Cigars

Alaska—Herewith is $3 for HOBBIES—$2.50 for subscription renewal and 50¢ for a couple of cigars which I hope you will enjoy when you write those splendid editorials. If you will let me know the brand you smoke, I'll send you a box of them. Mr. Albert White, our Republican National Committeeman for Alaska, remarked to me only a few minutes ago that he too enjoyed your editorial analysis of the political scene.—F. J. Harrison.

Helps the New Ones

Minnesota—I am new at collecting and find your magazine so very helpful and interesting.—Mrs. L. L. Phillips.

Back from the Wars

New Jersey—Back from over two years in the Pacific with the Navy Sea Bees. Wish to again receive my—as the family calls it—monthly Bible. Enclosed is check for one year's subscription.—Charles C. Shepard.

Thanks, Lady Librarian

New Hampshire—HOBBIES is one of the most popular magazines in our reading room. Young and old look for it each month. We cannot be without it, so that is why I am sending our renewal early.—Derry Public Library.

You Can't do Without It

Texas—I let my subscription expire some time ago on the theory that I no longer had the time to give to this magazine. However, I have missed it more than I can say, so I shall be joyously anticipating each copy.—Mrs. Porter Lindsley, Jr.

Learns a Lot

California—I enjoy HOBBIES very much and have learned a lot about antiques from it. I am collecting glass and other items and have enjoyed the letters and the helpfulness of your advertisers. Mostly they have been friendly and very nice to deal with. I also enjoy the straightforward manner in which Mr. Lightner presents his articles.—Mrs. Carl Kruse.

Constant Reader

Tennessee—My interest in HOBBIES has been keen since the very first issue. I have a complete file of the magazine to date. This file I value as part and parcel of my collection and library pertaining thereto. You are to be congratulated on continuing the magazine in such fine form in the midst of so many difficulties besetting us on every side. By its publication, you are helping to make life brighter and more interesting to thousands who are encouraged to continue their hobbies, thus brushing away the cobwebs of work and worry and affording much information, recreation, and pleasure.—S. Homer Tatum.

But We Make a Million a Year

Iowa—Hats off to you—Mr. Lightner for your courage and optimism during these trying times. The readers of HOBBIES are fortunate, in that they have a publisher, who himself, is intensely interested in diversified collections, and the publishing of HOBBIES, is more a labor of love, rather than profit.—F. J. Gluck.

It Takes Work

Colorado—I don't know of any other organization that puts their heart and soul into their work like the HOBBIES staff. I like your sincerity.—Mrs. E. L. Muehler.

School Teacher's Perspective

Iowa—We enjoy HOBBIES very much. I like to read Mr. Lightner's pages in the magazine. It gives us great pleasure to know there is one who is not afraid to print the truth as he sees it. President Truman is a far better man than I ever realized we could get to straighten out the terrible mess in which we find ourselves. I believe he is a man with his feet on the ground and his head where it ought to be (tending to our own business.) He can't make too many changes, all at once, so it will take him some time before we will see much results. Since I am a teacher I naturally think in terms of my work. I couldn't go into a high school classroom, where the children have had their own way and a good time at another's expense, and expect to make drastic changes without wrecking the school. President Truman, in a much greater way, has the same situation to handle. After all, old or young, we are much like children and it depends a great deal on the ingenuity of a wise leader just how our country weathers the terrible days ahead.—Pearl Morgan.

Good Results

California—We had such splendid results from advertising in your magazine a few years ago when we had a shop on the west coast that we are very anxious to advertise our present location.—Austin, Dumont Antiques.

Buying a Pleasure

Montana—I have derived much pleasure from dealing with your advertisers and reading HOBBIES.—J. W. Miller.

First on List

Iowa—Believe I would rather do without any of my other magazines. Keep your editorial pages coming. They are worth the price of the magazine.—Iska Du Vall.

Helps Run Shop

Louisiana—I feel I cannot successfully run my antique shop without it.—Mrs. Effie Hoover.

Essential in Glass

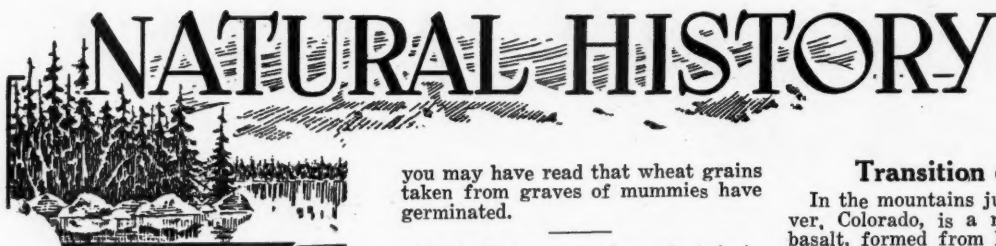

New York—I am collecting American glass and have been advised that your magazine is essential.—Mrs. A. Lewis.

A Victorian Lady

New York—It hardly seems possible that a year has passed since I mailed you my first check for a subscription to HOBBIES. I have spent many pleasant hours with each issue and would like to extend my appreciation to you for your splendid magazine. It has opened a new world to me, although I have always cherished my grandmother's treasures. I still live in the same house where I spent a happy childhood among those old things. They are, to this day, in their old, accustomed places—even at the risk of my being called, "a mid-Victorian fuddy-duddy," as one youngster did. My collection of porcelain, mostly Royal Vienna, has added much to my joy in the old home, and the articles and pictures of attractive ways to display such things in HOBBIES has helped immensely. I read the magazine from cover to cover, and find myself interested in all the hobbies discussed.—Norma L. Veness.

We Keep Trying

New Jersey—Let me take this opportunity to tell you how delighted I always am with the set-up and placing of my ad. Always 100% correct—how do you do it?—Helen Bolcher.

Natural History Briefs

The whale is not a fish because it lives in the ocean, but a mammal as it breathes through lungs and suckles its young.

Did you ever observe that the seeds of some plants will retain their germinating powers only for a year or two while others will grow much older? There is an authentic record of the seeds of the Canna, which has a hard black shell or covering, germinating 20 years after dropping from a plant in a garden in Vermillion, S. Dak., in 1922. No plant of the Canna has been raised in the lot since that year, yet young plants have come up nearly every year since and two came up in 1942.

They have all come up in the immediate vicinity where the parent plant grew in 1922. It is not true as you may have read that wheat grains taken from graves of mummies have germinated.

Gold Fish were domesticated in China 450 B. C., which accounts for the fact that they will live in captivity when native fish will soon perish.

There are no mollusca such as clams or snail shells, in the Missouri River due to polluted conditions of its waters. Shells live on the bottom of rivers and lakes. There is no stable bottom to the Missouri River because of rapid deposition and ever-changing currents.

Nor are there shells in the rivers flowing into the Big Muddy from the west except at the heads or sources of the Grand and White Rivers where the waters come from springs.

How do shells get into isolated spots? It is the habit for the young of some species to attach themselves to foreign objects in order to survive, this may be to gills of fish or feathers of ducks, and are spread over a wide territory by fish and ducks in migrating.

It takes a lot of little things to know and learn a lot of bigger things.

Wm. Over in Museum News of the University of South Dakota.

Transition of Life

In the mountains just east of Denver, Colorado, is a mesa capped by basalt, formed from lava of volcanic eruptions, which shows the transition between the age of reptiles and the age of mammals, according to scientific survey. A little more than 200 feet below this basalt cap is a layer of rock containing fossil plants and fossil bones of strange animals known to have inhabited the earth during the Paleocene period, about 50,000,000 years ago. Then comes a layer of about 50 feet of barren rock. Immediately below this are rock strata with the bones of dinosaurs.

The warm-blooded creatures of the Paleocene, including very primitive types of flesh-eaters, were the distant ancestors of the creatures which inhabit the earth today.

A clear-cut horizon between the end of the age of reptiles when the earth was dominated by gigantic, cold-blooded, small-brained animals and the "dawn age" of warm-blooded life was long sought in this locality by paleontologists.

Here, the sequence of rocks from one age to the other is clearly shown.

At this locality the transition from one age of life to the other is represented by 50 feet of unfossiliferous strain requiring at least many thousands of years for deposition.

The causes for the extinction of the dinosaurs remain unknown. Mammals of a very primitive sort existed, it is known, in association with them, but seemed to be decidedly inferior creatures in the pattern of life. Then, with the disappearance of the cold-blooded reptiles, the more agile creatures with bigger brains survived to become the rulers of the earth.

TRAVEL SEARCH FOR BELLS

By A. C. Meyer

$2.50 postpaid.

In the last 10 years, semi-retired, Mr. Meyer and his wife, also a bell enthusiast, indulged their hobby of bell collecting, which has taken them to many parts of the world. In every city and virtually every crossroads, they added interesting specimens to their collection. Now "grounded" because of the war, Mr. Meyer has summarized it all in a down-to-earth story.

BELLS

Javanese Bronze Bell

A VERY heavy bronze bell from Java, measuring 11 inches in height, five inches in diameter at base.

Embossed decorations are in the form of serpents and fancy designs. Features of the 10 human heads wearing queer looking headgear are clear and distinct on this not very modern, yet hardly antique bell.

It is incomprehensible why the heavy metal clapper should have been made with two rows of sharp needle-like projections.

This has had the effect of producing a rough uneven ridge on the inner surface of the bell. This fine piece was a find of Mrs. A. C. Meyer, wife of the author of the recently published book, Travel Search for Bells.

Miniaturia in the Ozarks

By RICHARD W. FRELIGH

This Ozark region, with its wealth of hobbyana, creative possibilities, scenic and restful topographical beauty, has appealed to me for years; so my wife and I decided to cast our lot here, and came from Ohio last year to build a home in the Ozarks. I see so much in your fine magazine about the "hillbilly dolls" and other interesting collection items that I wanted to tell about an interesting character I met in Springfield, who seems to be an ace collector of miniature books and other things. Of course there are very few of these "itsy bitsy" volumes produced now, and I think most of those one finds are made in Edinburgh, Scotland. Among his items are a complete set of Shakespeare, the Rubaiyat, Scott's "Lady of the Lake," and ever so many more. His "suit-case library," weighing only a few pounds, is easily conveyed to Christian service camps where it is the delight of the young people. He says he regrets having lost a complete miniature Bible on the road years ago and has been unable to replace it.

Hobbyists, meet Tom Elmore Lucy, globe-trotter, writer, radio and stage artist, now retired, but still active in making many public appearances, and collecting. Besides miniature books, he also has a love for rare editing, and besides volumes for himself, his life is a sort of a sacrificial adventure in "labor-of-love" for his friends; he calls himself a "bibliophile," and goes to special pains to find unusual things for his friends. "Why don't you put a price on a book, enough to, at least, pay you for the trouble of finding it and the essential correspondence" I asked. The reply was natural: "Why boy, money isn't everything! I get a kick out of helping somebody. They made me a life member of the Rotary in my old home town, Russellville, Arkansas. As you know, our motto is: 'He profits best who serves most.'"

On the walls of his studio are many interesting pictures, mottoes, sentiments, etc., which he has gathered during his world tours. A hand-made fan from Jamaica, another from Mexico, a photo from Dickens' Old Curiosity Shop in London, an oil painting made by a Japanese artist on shipboard in the Pacific, photos of many groups of players directed by him in various cities, and a collection of poetry magazines, second to none, graces his reading table.

Being quite interested in the literary lines myself I am sure that if I were to tell of all the various interests that hold my attention whenever I visit him, I would well have another volume to add to his ever growing collection.

chine, which had won the 150-mile Paris-Bordeaux race over good roads, was unable to get sufficient traction to push through the snow and the driver gave up the race after encountering snow drifts in Washington Park.

The Macy machine, which seemed ill-fated, ran into a series of accidents. It "slid" on the steel rails of a street car line at Adams street and Michigan Avenue and "crashed into the rear end of a horse car." The report of the accident says, "The gearing was damaged somewhat but the motorcycle apparently was not in bad shape. The rear 'dashboard' of the horse car was badly damaged."

By the time the Mueller-Benz machine reached Lincoln Park it had its pneumatic tires wrapped with twine to keep them from spinning and one of the operatives was sanding the belt to keep it from slipping. As this machine passed the water tower on Michigan Avenue, one of the men called to the crowd:

"We are just an hour and sixteen minutes out of Jackson Park." The distance covered had been nine miles! The spectators applauded. The Sturges electric reached the north end of Lincoln Park but had to quit. Its batteries had given out.

The Morris and Salom electric machine, in which Hiram P. Maxim, inventor and mechanical engineer, rode as umpire, ran smoothly. New batteries were put in at 10:27 and again at 12:02. These weighed about 150 pounds each and the change required five minutes each time. But it was not to finish the race. A report on this car said:

"After traveling for ten or twelve miles and demonstrating the machine's ability, the driver turned around in Lincoln Park. The owners of the electric machines had emphasized before the race that, owing to the limitations of the batteries and the difficulties of replacement under the circumstances, they had no expectations of finishing the race, but merely wished to prove that their machines were practical for 'normal' distance driving even under adverse circumstances."

Newspaper accounts of the race north of Lincoln Park told of the Macy machine "steaming" north along Sheridan Drive and the Duryea entry "bowling" along. These two machines were "neck and neck" on Davis Street in Evanston. Coming back through Rogers Park the Macy machine hit a hack and bent the steering gear until it was almost useless. It managed to reach the "relay station" at Clark Street and Devon where it stopped for an hour and twenty minutes for repairs.

"The machinery was also cleaned and six gallons of naphtha and seven gallons of water were taken on. At this time the Mueller-Benz machine was trailing, having made several stops to oil and fix the clutch which had been bent by the rough roads."

The Mueller machine was driven by two brothers, Oscar and Frederick Mueller, sons of the owner. By 8:53 P. M. it was only 24 minutes behind the Duryea. The umpire in this car, Charles B. King, reported:

"After leaving the second relay station we began to feel the effects of the strain. Oscar Mueller had not been able to get any breakfast and the three of us had only a sandwich apiece for lunch. After about 35 miles had been covered Oscar Mueller changed his place for one on a cutter and a substitute was given his place. Frederick Mueller continued as driver but seemed to go to pieces soon after this. When we reached Halsted and 55th Streets he lost consciousness. I seized the lever and guided the wagon south to 61st Street, then to State Street, over to Washington Avenue, and from there down the Midway Plaisance to the finishing point. During the trip we took on board six gallons of gasoline, six pails of ice, and three pails of snow.

He did not explain that the snow and ice was used to keep the motor from overheating. That seemed to be understood at the time. In both the

SOME OLD ADVERTISEMENTS

From Chambers' Journal, August 11, 1866.

Newspapers, like natives, are best discussed as soon as they are opened. Keep one only a day or two, and what a weary, flat, stale, and unprofitable operation the reading of it is! All the life and spirit seems to have departed, leaving it as woebegone and dust-dry as poor Yorick's skull, once so full of jest and excellent fancy. But there is this peculiarity about the newspaper—let it be laid by for a hundred years or so, and it becomes interesting once more. Even its advertisements, which when fresh were left unnoticed, or read as it were by accident, become invested with attractions. Indeed, to our mind, there is no part of an old paper so interesting as its advertising columns; containing announcements of sales by inch of candle; advertisements of merchandise to be sold a good pennyworth; cautions against trusting truant wives, or harbouring deserters and runaway apprentices; puffs of cures for the vapours, and alluring appeals from lottery agents; besides innumerable others, illustrating bygone manners and customs, elucidating disputed points of history and biography, and throwing unexpected light upon the origin of things as familiar to us as they were new to our forefathers.

Some of these unconsidered trifles, curiosities in one way or another, we intend to make a note of here. First, let us take a batch of literary advertisements, giving the precedence its age demands to a notification appearing in the Observer for December 3, 1684, to the following effect: 'A Gentleman having been requested by some persons to undertake the translating of Arrianus his Epictetus into English, hath so far advanced it, that the same will in a very short time be published; and this notice is given to prevent interfering with the same design.' There is something positively refreshing about this, whether we take it to be a proof of excessive simplicity on the part of the advertiser, or accept it as evidence of an honourable scrupulosity among the publishing fraternity, to which, we fear, a modern member of it would scarcely dare to appeal. Eighteen months after unhappy Otway died in his hiding-place on Tower Hill the Observer (November 30, 1686) announced: 'Whereas Mr. Thomas Otway, some time before his Death, made Four Acts of a Play; whoever can give notice in whose hands the copy lies, either to Mr. Thomas Betterton, or Mr. William Smith, at the Theatre-royal, shall be well rewarded for his pains.' The missing manuscript never gladdened the eyes of the managers; it had probably lit the fire of some lodging-house keeper, and perished as ignominiously as its unfortunate author.

From the Morning Chronicle of the 17th of July 1804, we extract the annexed modest advertisement: 'A Gentleman, whose literary productions have met public approval, undertakes to conduct epistolary correspondence, where correctness and elegance of style are necessary; whether on familiar topics, on business, or on courtship. He pledges himself to the strictest secrecy. Whatever the subject, no confidence will be abused, no matter divulged. He presumes he could use a strain the best adapted to display the feelings of the heart, and attain its object. Apply to Mr. Radnor, South Windmill Street.' Poor Mr. Radnor! He was born before his time. Surely he was just the man for Colo, who not long ago issued the following mysterious announcement: 'Wanted, Literary Co-operation. A gentleman of energy and critically literary powers of perusal and writing, able to devote leisure in such a way during the initiatory and promotive steps of a colonial matter of high and comprehensive scope, would find such the medium for ultimate position either home or otherwise.' After this, our next specimen will seem commonplace indeed, although it emanates from one who read the stars, and told in the year of grace 1712: 'At the Old Lilly, near the Barge House, in Christchurch Parish, Southwark, at London, liveth Francis Moore, licensed physician and student in Astrology; who, by the blessing of God, cures all sorts of agues with one dose, in young and old, when left off by others. He hath an excellent medicine for fits in young people or children; he has an excellent worm-powder, and a family tincture that gives present ease in colic, and carries off all pains in an instant. He gives judgment in the Astrological way. He desires all that send to him out of the country, upon their own business, to pay the postage of their letters or expect no answer.' A century and a half has elapsed since Francis Moore thus set forth his claims to public patronage, but his Almanac still sells by thousands, nor are believers in his present existence and prophetic powers wanting in the land.

Cock-fighting may be reckoned among extinct amusements, although the Police do, every now and then, hunt up a few furtive followers of the cruel game. A hundred and fifty years ago, however, it held so prominent a place among British sports, that county was literally pitted against county—at six guineas the battle, and a hundred guineas the odd battle. One of these grand matches is thus announced in the Daily Courant (1703): 'As the color faded from his face, and the wrinkles, invisible to society, came out under his eyes, as he said in a voice that had lost some of its usual confidence: 'Do we meet as friends or as enemies, Marie?'

'As enemies,' replied the woman—'as enemies till death!'

The Picture POST CARD

CARDS OF THE PAST

By WILLIAM HOLCOMBE
RICHARDSON

In many years of collecting cards I have concentrated on those that show scenes of yesteryear, and unusual cards that once passed through the mail.

My post card album reflects many changes in my home town, New Orleans, La. Browsing through this album we see the original Charity Hospital with its two story structure, which after long years of faithful service was demolished in 1940 and a 24-story building erected on the same site.

The old Masonic Temple Building with its five-stories is also pictured in my albums. This building has been replaced with a modern, 20-story structure, which is more suitable to the lodge's ever-growing activities.

In the early 19th century the old French Opera house in the Old Crescent City was destroyed by fire. It was here that the great Adeline Patti, and other renowned artists made their first American debut. Post card scenes of this landmark enhance my post card album. Not far away, according to my album's story stood the old Hotel Royal, and the old slave block where prior to the Civil War, slaves were sold at auction to the highest bidder.

On another street, looms, via the album, the old Begeau Restaurant, where many famous people from all over the world came to dine. After the death of Madam Begeau, the place declined and I have never been able to find out what happened to the building.

The old Sugar Exchange, located in the business section of the city, lives only in memory and in the post card album. The old building was torn down some years ago to make way for the march of progress.

Picturesque are the scenes of the earlier Mardigras. Former New Orleans places, now recalled via the post card are: Archbishop Place, built in 1734, razed by fire in the early 1900; Stag Saloon, located on Gravier St., where a garage now stands; Horticultural Hall, located in Audubon Park; the Convent of the Holy Family, also known as the famous Orleans ballroom; the Old Sophie Newcomb College, located on Washington Avenue, now housed on the opposite side of town.

boat with the name Lafayette on the paddle wheel. In another salt boat, the frigate Constitution was represented. This one was made about 1830 when the whole country was aroused by the proposed scrapping of the Constitution.

There is a very rare historical salt in the form of a high-backed sofa with a design on the sides of an American Eagle, wings outstretched and claws holding a shield. In another historical salt cellar, four standing eagles with wings closed form the corners of the container, while decorative streamers from the eagles' beaks hold up a center shield.

Colors used in these lacy-type salt cellars were clear, pale light blue, grey blue, sapphire blue, purple blue, dark olive green, pink and red.

With the advent of the era of standardization in the past century, the variety of shapes of salt cellars became more and more limited, finally culminating in their present conventional design.

"At the Sign of the Crest"

MacFarland Coat-of-Arms

By MABEL LOUISE KEECH

MacFarland

IS YOUR NAME one of those listed below? Then if you or your ancestors were from Scotland, probably they were of the Clan MacFarlan, as it was anciently spelled. These are families that were septed or dependents of the Clan MacFarlan, and paid allegiance to the clan by fighting in their battles and entering into tournaments; by paying taxes to help keep up the land; by giving service as protectors of the forests, castles, and other possessions which they held more or less in common. They wore the same plaid or tartan, with some slight variation; had the same flower badge, song, and war-cry. Also, bore the same Coat-of-Arms.

So, if you have been looking for a Coat-of-Arms under your name, if it is one of those in this list, and could not find it, and you can prove you were from the location of the ancient MacFarlan Clan, then you are eligible to its use.

The names: Allan, Allanson, Bartholomew, Caw, Galbraith, Kinneson, Lennox, MacAllan, MacCause, MacEoin, MacGeich, MacJames, Mackinlay, MacNair, MacRob, MacWalter, MacWilliam, Miller, Monach, Napier, Parlane, Stalker, Thomason, Weaver, Weir; and still others, either with similar spelling, or forms that are never seen today. Some of these families have a different Coat-of-Arms.

The tartan has 5 colors and 27 divisions; red is predominant, the others—black, green, white, purple.

Loch Sloy (Sloigh) is the war-cry, and its English equivalent is "The Loch of the Host." The badge is the cranberry, or cloudberry.

This is called "an old but unfortunate clan." One of only two from whom descent from the ancient earls of the district in which their possessions lay, can be proved by charter; the other, Robertson. Their ancestor was Gilchrist, brother of Maldowen, 3rd Earl of Lennox. The clan received its name from Parlan (Bartholomew), who lived during the reign of King David Bruce. Their territory was at the head of Loch Lomond, between that loch and Loch Long; and the seat of the Chief was at Inverglas.

HE BEARETH FOR ARMS: Argent a saltire engrailed between four roses gules. Crest—A demi-savage grasping in his dexter hand a sheaf of arrows and pointing with his sinister to an imperial crown or. Supporters—Two Highlanders in belted plaids, with broadswords, and bows and arrows in full draught proper and on a compartment wavy, the word "Lochsloy." Motto—This I'll defend.

COAT-OF-ARMS

The above description of the MacFarlan Armorial Bearing is registered in Burke's General Armory, and confirmed in Fairbairn's Book of Crests, and recorded in all Scottish lists of Coats-of-Arms of the chiefs of the Clans. It was granted first to the Chief of "that ilk," and to the section of the Clan residing in Dumbarton. The final letter "d" and also "e" were added in later days by different branches of the family. Other Coats-of-Arms of these branches were practically the same, the slight variations showing the moving about of the family.

Translated into non-Heraldic terms: A silver (argent) shield on which is charged a St. Andrew's cross or saltire, with escalloped (engrailed) edges. Between the four arms of the cross are four conventional roses. The cross and the roses are all red (gules) as the "color name" is given after the names of both charges; therefore, the cross is the same color as the roses. The Crest is a demi-savage wreathed with laurel holding in his right (dexter) hand a sheaf of arrows and pointing with his left (sinister) to an imperial crown of gold (or). The supporters of the shield are two Highlanders dressed in the MacFarland plaid, wearing broadswords, and holding their bows and arrows in full draught, or, ready to shoot. The entire outfit of the Highlanders is in natural color (proper). The war-cry "Lochsloy" is on a wavy band above the Crest and the Clan motto below the Crest.

The saltire or St. Andrew's cross, one of the 290 forms of the cross, is used more by the Scottish people than by any other. It is a symbol of resolution and was granted as a reward to those who scaled the walls of towns. Any form of the cross denotes Crusader ancestry and symbolizes suffering, sacrifice and sorrow. The engrailed edge denotes the holding of large landed estates.

The rose, as all other flowers, is the emblem of hope, peace and joy; according to old poets the red rose expressed beauty and grace and is reckoned the first among flowers. In England the red rose was the badge of the House of Lancaster during the War of the Roses. Sometimes the red rose or the white rose (of the House of York) is combined with the thistle on the Coats-of-Arms of families associated with both Scotland and England.

The barbarian wearing the laurel wreath is considered a protector and not an enemy of the family. The arrows designate preparation for service and the pointing to the crown as special service to the King.

The supporters of the shield are dressed in the authentic MacFarland plaid and by their weapons and their attitude show also their preparation for service.

Colors are representative of the personal characteristics of the original bearer, and are granted only upon merit. Silver signifies sincerity and peace; red, courage and magnanimity.

This "Interpretation" of the Coat-of-Arms is a copy of the one sent to a client with a hand-painted emblazonment of the Arms in gorgeous color, as you can imagine, with even the plaid properly colored. Since writing that, some months ago, I have found an interesting story of the crest, which I shall add here. It is too long to tell in full, but a brief account will suffice for the purpose.

The chiefs who stood by Queen Mary, placed her, after her escape from prison, in the midst of their battalions, intending to take her to the impregnable castle of Dumbarton. They had planned to seek out the Regent and "give him battle," but he was on the same errand, and they clashed, May 10th, 1568.

Andrew MacFarlane appeared with 500 archers of his own name, who were victorious. The clan took 3 of Queen Mary's banners, which were long preserved in the family.

Regent Murray bestowed upon Andrew MacFarlane the crest of a "demi-savage proper holding in the dexter hand a sheaf of arrows and pointing with his sinister to an imperial crown or," and the motto, or "Slughorn" (from which slogan), "This I'll defend."

Daniel MacFarland came to Worcester, Mass., and went from there to Concord, N. H., in 1718, and seems to be the first of his name on record in our country, but at the time of the Revolution there were many who enrolled to uphold the independence of the States, and, by the time of the first census of the States, in 1790, there were "Heads of Families" by the name in everyone of the 13 original States except Rhode Island. And the spellings! MacFarlan, then "d" or "e" added; MacFarlin and "line," and even MacFarling. Sometimes Mac, and sometimes Mc.

This first family were Scotch Presbyterians, and came from Argyllshire to Ulster in Ireland, then to America. Here may be a good place to mention the fact that these so-called Scotch-Irish, were really Scotch, and not Irish. Some people confuse this, as they do the "Pennsylvania Dutch," who were not "Dutch," from Holland, but were Germans, who came also before the Revolution.

This impressive Armorial Bearing, with its cross, and roses, and snappy Highlanders, should be a great inspiration to you of Scottish ancestry, even if not of the Clan MacFarlane!

CREST CORNER

November! THANKSGIVING!! And the most wonderful Thanksgiving season in all the history of the world. May we keep the peace. And may we so impress those who have been our enemies that they too will be thankful with us that we held aloft the principles instilled within us by those who founded our America. They have many splendid characteristics and abilities which should be turned into the proper channels.

You who have German ancestors who achieved so as to warrant Coats-of-Arms should not be ashamed to own or search for them. There are good sources in our country. There are many more devices used by them than by the English, symbols which told the stories of their occupations, their professions, their hobbies, as well as their military rank and titled offices.

Yes, the Japanese have Coats-of-Arms, also. I have a sketch of the Emperor's drawn for me at an exhibit in Detroit several years ago, by a highly educated Japanese business man. This had a flower native in their country; and he said nearly all of their seals had flowers, birds, or something symbolical of the beauty of nature.

So—however good or bad, we all have our ancestors! And it is up to us to study their characteristics and successes and failures, for whether we like it or not, we are a composite of them all, with a mind and a will of our own to try to bring to the surface the best in all of them. What a responsibility! I tremble to think of it!

Turning back to Thanksgiving—those of us who have not felt the horrors of this war as some of you, live these happy days with you and are grateful; and if there is an empty chair at this Thanksgiving table, we mourn with you, and yet you and we are thankful for the memory that can never be taken away—and for the heroism. At that first Thanksgiving table, there were many missing, who were not in wars, but gave their lives in the face of cold and hunger, that our nation might live! Do you remember those words: "Thanksgiving is Thanksgiving?"

Gems and Minerals

SAPPHIRE

Gem of Truth and Sincerity

Sapphire is the gem chosen as the birthstone for the first month of Autumn, September. The soft blue of the hazy Autumn sky is reflected in the lovely blue sapphire; while the bright orange and yellow, of the Golden sapphire, speak of Indian Summer.

Sapphires are found in all the colors of the spectrum, including orange, violet, yellow, and green, as well as in many other colors. While the most valuable color of sapphire is the velvety cornflower blue, many women prefer to possess a sapphire of an unusual color. These sapphires are known as fancy sapphires, and are often the choice of the person who does not "vibrate to blue."

Many people are very much surprised to know that both sapphires and rubies are Corundum. If Corundum of the gem variety is red, it is ruby—if blue, sapphire.

Sapphire in olden days was held to represent truth, sincerity and constancy. While ruby symbolizes ardent passion, sapphire is the gem of calm and tried affection.

The Star sapphire, a cloudy translucent gem stone, is mysterious and elusive. In its center is a star that moves with light angles. It is called astera and has six rays.

When these stones are mined they are just dull pebbles and it requires the art of the lapidist to release the rare beauty of the star. The gem has to be cut in cabochon, which means domed, and of course the trick is to cut the stone so precisely that the center of the star comes at the central point in the gem.

There is a nice tradition about the star sapphire. The three cross bars which form the star are Faith, Hope and Love.

Now if you really want us to get technical, although who wouldn't settle for Faith, Hope and Love, we can tell you just what goes on in this star stone. The six rays of the star are produced by the total reflection of light from the surfaces of a multitude of micro-inclusions enclosed in the crystal and grouped into three sets—each of which is parallel to the face of the hexagonal prism.

The gem mineral, Corundum, is of the hexagonal system. As the gem is moved the star moves, giving a vital, living, mysterious quality and because of the myriad of tiny inclusions, no star stone is transparent, but possesses a luminous quality.

The star sapphire is next to the diamond in hardness, and of course has a high lustre. These stones are often set with diamonds to enhance this lustre and usually with a white metal—platinum, palladium, or white gold.

The ensemble of a sapphire engagement ring and a sapphire and diamond wedding ring is appropriate for the woman born in September.

Courage to Orators and Bashful Lovers

There are two birthstones for August, Sardonyx and Peridot. Peridot is the alternate.

The Sardonyx family may be rightfully claimed by the man or woman who was born in August.

The gem names Carnelian, Sard and Sardonyx have long been used interchangeably as names for the same gem-stone, but gemologically there is a difference which should be of interest to the person born in August who may rightfully claim any of these gem-stones as his birthstone. All are members of the Chalcedony Quartz family but differ slightly in color. Carnelian includes the red and yellowish varieties; Sard the reddish-brown and brown varieties which lack much of the beauty of Carnelian. Sardonyx—because of the syllable onyx—which means a stone of different colored layers—is rightly applied only to banded stones and is more often seen in cameos cut so that raised figures will be carved from the white or black band on the brown background of the darker band.

Because the gem is an aristocrat, having a pedigree which extends back to 4000 B. C., it has been loved and cherished by many people under different names. The Egyptians call it Khenemet and many fine scarabs cut from this gem are to be found in museums all over the world. To the Romans it was Sardius and was chosen by them for the birthstone of the person born in August. The Hebrews called it Odem and named it as the first stone in the breast plate of the High Priest. Probably the name Carnelian was derived from the word carnoio, meaning flesh. The finest color of Carnelian is the dark, rich, translucent red.

Many superstitions surround this gem of ancient lineage, but it was supposed to lend courage to orators and bashful lovers. Famous Roman orators often possessed as many as six Carnelian rings. An Armenian writer of the 17th century declared that anyone wearing a Carnelian is proof against injury from falling houses or walls, stating bravely that "no man who wore a Carnelian was ever found in a collapsed house or beneath a fallen wall."

The Carnelian has been chosen for men's seal rings not only because of its beauty, but also because it is a tough stone and will stand hard usage. Women's Carnelian jewelry should be set in yellow gold. This jewelry may be used effectively with women's sports costumes and a ring with a large stone is a most attractive accent for the tailored costume of rich brown color or for any of the brown furs.

preliminary run and the official race ice was one of the most necessary requirements for the continued operation of the motor.

The Macy machine gave out completely at 6:15 P. M. An explanation was that "the cylinder opened so that it would not carburate." They worked on it until 11:30 P. M. but could not make it run. The next day the machine was repaired and continued to finish the 55-mile course.

The judges took from November 28 to December 5 to "study the reports and consider the data" before declaring the winner. Awards were:

"An award of $500 to the Sturges Motor Wagon Company of Springfield, Massachusetts, for best performance in the road race, for range of speed and pull, with compactness of design.

"An award of $1,500 to H. Mueller and Company motorcycle, of Decatur, Illinois, for performance on the road and economy of operation.

"An award of $500 to R. H. Macy and Company motorcycle of New York for showing made in the road race.

"An award of $500 to the Sturges Electric motorcycle, of Chicago, for showing made in the road race.

"An award of a gold medal to the Morris and Salom Electrobat, of Philadelphia, for best showing made in the official tests, for safety, ease of control, absence of noise, vibration, heat or odor, cleanliness and general excellence of design and workmanship."

The judges reported that every contestant had violated some vital rule, and so had no valid claim for consideration as prize winners. But, they added, "the remarkable run made by Duryea and Mueller (5 miles an hour for 55 miles) compelled substantial recognition." It was pointed out that the contest for "promoting and stimulating the invention, development, perfection and general adoption of motor vehicles or motorcycles. It was decided that the test took precedence over the rules."
